Why were they demanding it? Did they want these countries relieved of this debt? If so, why did they not propose to cancel their indebtedness at the same time they proposed that the country should cancel its indebtedness? They wanted the debt due this Government canceled because they knew that if the debt to us was canceled their debt then would be that much nearer payment. They wanted to exploit Europe, and they are seeking to exploit Europe to-day. In order to carry out their damnable conspiracy it was actually proposed that there should be organized a syndicate of American capitalists who would control the goods that were being sent from this country to Europe, and that a corresponding syndicate should be organized in Europe, and that that European syndicate should have the distribution of the foods and materials sent from this country by the American syndicate. Thus, one syndicate here would control the foreign market of the American people and collect its toll, and the European syndicate would levy its tribute upon the crusts that went between the white lips of the starving people of Europe; and in each case the profit would be taken down, the tribute would be exacted.

Now that that time has passed, that Europe's wounds are healing, that that money is still very necessary in Europe, these financial institutions find there a better market for their money than they can find in America. They are loaning at 7 and 7½ and 8 per cent of interest. They are taking the securities at a discount, according to the best figures I have been given, of about 10 to 15 per cent. They do not propose to cancel those securities. They propose to collect them; and in order to collect them the same gentlemen who formally demanded the entire cancellation of this debt are now demanding that we shall cancel it in part. That is all that this settlement means. It was camouflaged. There was more of an effort made to conceal it than I have ever known to be made before by any set of men representing the American Republic.

They start in blandly with a solemn agreement that Italy shall pay its debt in full. We were told on the floor of the Senate that Italy was to pay its debt in full; that there was no discount of this debt. Yet every man who has studied this proposition knows that what we are getting is one-tenth of 1 per cent of this debt, scattered over a period of 62 years. Back of this subterfuge, in silence, with motionless tongues and dumb lips, but backed by a majority already delivered, and ready to be delivered again, sit the sponsors for this infamy.

What is the pretext? Ability to pay. Ability to pay to-day, sir, does not bar Italy from agreeing not to tax the securities she gives us at this miserable discount. Her present ability to pay is not affected by the fact that in the future she shall not levy a tax greater than the interest she pays us upon these securities if they are held by an Italian citizen.

Why is this proposition being put through? Because every bank that was in favor of canceling the debt in toto wants its canceled by 75 per cent, if they can not get a hundred per cent, because these banks have rallied, through their banking houses, their allies, their confederates, their associates, in the States, who have appealed to Senators. They have not stopped there. They have appealed to the representatives of great corporations they control. Great copper corporations that are owned and controlled by these interests have appealed to Senators. Other great corporations have appealed to them, and Senators are yielding to an appeal in this matter which is the selfish appeal of great institutions that are going to put money in their purses by virtue of the votes that have been cast, and probably will be cast again.

Ability to pay! We discussed that question. What is the ability of Italy to pay? She has substantially doubled her wealth in the last 10 years of time. The onward march of her prosperity is unarrested. Her population is greater than it was before the war. What is her ability to pay? It is not always considered, but it is well to consider the fact that the power of nations to produce wealth, and of peoples to produce wealth, has multiplied in the last quarter of a century five or ten fold.

The farmer of 50 or 60 years ago, with his inadequate machinery, could cultivate but small pieces of land. He could not get into the market without great difficulty. His productive power was limited. To-day a single farmer, with modern machinery, can produce more than could be produced by an entire family 50 years ago.

Sixty or seventy years ago a mother in her home sat laboriously at a loom, and it took her about all winter to weave the cloth to make a suit or two of clothes for the men or the children of her family. To-day one woman stands in a great factory and supervises from 20 to 30 looms that are turning out thousands of yards daily.

One factory in this country produced 85 fully equipped automobiles in one day of eight hours' work. That was almost equal, perhaps, to all of the carrying capacity of all of the wagons east of the Mississippi River 50 or 75 years ago.

Great highways are built of cement, all of them tending to reduce the cost of production and cost of carriage. The power of the people of the world to produce, I say, has been in 50 years multiplied ten or fifteen times over. So, with that power to produce is the power to create wealth.

We had at the close of the Civil War a debt of a little over $2,000,000,000, I think. It was a greater debt per capita, measured by the power of production, than the mighty debt we owe to-day. The man who stands here and says that he can look into the future for 62 years and can say that Italy can not pay this debt in full is a false prophet, because he is making a statement he knows nothing about.

Standing on the battle line until 6,000,000 of her people had been destroyed was the great Empire of Russia, and then the spirit of the people broke. They rose in their madness and overthrew the tyrannical government of the czars. They sought to repudiate it in toto, and among other things they said they would not pay the debts of this discredited government, against which they had rebelled and which they had overthrown. Because they said that, because the new Government of the people of Russia said they would not pay the indebtedness incurred by their former masters, by the tyrants who ruled over them, by the creatures who had driven them in hordes into the snows of Siberia to perish, by the creatures who had represented to them government in the form of a Cossack, with a rifle across his saddle and a knout in his hand to be laid across their bleeding backs; because these people said they would not pay the debts of their oppressors, would not pay for the chains that had been forged for their limbs, would not pay for the scaffolds that had been erected for the execution of their fathers, would not pay the money that had been expended in lavish living and for jewels by those whose feet were upon their necks and whose swords were at their hearts—because of that, because they refused to pay, the world said Bolshevism and Russia should be repudiated and never recognized.

They came to this country to buy goods. They brought with them gold. They asked to be permitted to buy goods with the gold. They were turned away, because it was said they were a dishonest government and that they had repudiated their debts. Having done that, being in that very position to-day, we propose to permit Italy to repudiate 75 per cent of the debt she incurred when we gave her the goods and the money to save her from starvation and disaster within the last few years.

Ability to pay! The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] introduced a resolution. It was received with a quiet, polite senatorial sneer. He proposed to apply the rule of ability to pay to the American farmer. He proposed to say to the American farmer who had borrowed money from this Government, "We will settle with you just as we have settled with Italy. We will settle on the principle of your ability to pay. We will not take your car. We will not take your cow. We will not take your brood sow. We will not take your household goods and sell them," as Uncle Sam is about to do through the farm-loan banks. "We will not foreclose upon your farm." We are not actually taking the goods, wares, and chattels yet, but we will take them on deficiency judgments undoubtedly. "We will settle with you on your ability to pay from year to year."

The resolution was received with a sneer. It would not get three votes in this body. If we are to apply the rule of ability to pay to foreign nations, rich and powerful, ambitious, gathering armies to invade other lands, holding in subjection by the power of the sword other people, why should we not apply it to the American farmer? Why should we not apply it all along the line?

There is a great railroad, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, which formed the steel link that united the East and the West. It got into financial difficulty. Its stock, I think, is worth 5 or 6 cents on the dollar. It owes a large amount of money. It has an obligation to pay 6 per cent, and we are exacting the 6 per cent, although that 6 per cent must be paid by the shippers and travelers of the United States who move over that road, in the last analysis. Is there anybody who proposes to settle with the Milwaukee road on the principle of ability to pay?

What is this spirit that has suddenly come over the Senate of the United States, that we shall yield billions of the people's money to a foreign nation, that we shall cancel this debt, and that the debt shall be canceled for the most autocratic Government that has oppressed this earth in a half century of time?

We entered the war, so we were told, to democratize the world. We entered it, we were told, for the purpose of establishing the liberties of all peoples. We rescued Italy, I repeat, and when I say "we" I mean the Entente Allies. While it is true that there were not many American soldiers in Italy, our boys took their places in the trenches in France so the French and English soldiers could go to Italy.

I am charging nothing, and have charged nothing, against the courage of the Italian people. I have, on the other hand, always defended those people. But I did say that Bolshevism had rotted a portion of the army, and an inquiry into the facts shows it. So we established Italy upon a firm basis. We gave the world to understand, by the lips of President Wilson, by the signed conditions of the treaty of Versailles, by the negotiations that were carried on in the presence of the world, we gave all peoples to understand that when they were incorporated under a new government, their rights would be respected, their language, their religion, their customs, their liberties would be maintained. In spite of that pledge Italy took the Austrian Tyrol.

The Austrian Government as well as the population of south Tyrol, at the time of the annexation and after, frequently protested against the cession. The allied and associated powers stated in reply, at the peace conference, that though the frontiers as laid down by the treaties of peace could not be rectified, the Italian Government intended to pursue to a great extent a liberal policy toward its new subjects of German extraction with regard to their language and their cultural and economic interests.

On September 18, 1919, the Italian general in command in south Tyrol issued a proclamation in which he said that the suppression of foreign languages was not desired by the Italian Government. This assurance, as well as assurances of a similar nature, was frequently repeated.

The Italian Premier, Titoni, stated on September 27, 1919:

The peoples of other nationalities now to become our fellow countrymen should know that we entirely abhor the idea of suppressing these nationalities, and that we will respect their language and cultural institutions.

The King of Italy said at the opening of Parliament in 1919:

Our liberal tradition must show us the way. We shall most loyally respect local autonomous institutions.

Many authoritative statements of a similar kind could be mentioned. May it suffice to quote the Italian Premier, who said, 10 days after the King's speech:

We state emphatically that we acknowledge the right both of Germans as well as of Slavs to the preservation of their language and their culture.

This Italian policy, however, as laid down shortly after the conclusion of the World War, underwent a radical change with a development then inaugurated in Italian domestic affairs with the ascendancy of Fascist rule. Fascism broke all pledges given to the minority nationals in the former Austrian Tyrol at the time of its annexation. A radical program of denationalization was introduced by the dissolution of all non-Italian organizations in south Tyrol, by the seizure of German property, thereby trying to Italianize all Germanic names of families, and, above all, by radical measures in the school systems of education.

Let me refer to a few decrees issued to this effect by the Italian Government.

The Gazzetta Ufficiale of January 15, 1926, published a royal decree of January 10, 1926, No. 17, in which, according to article 1, the families of the Province of Trieste who had German names, the origins of which were possibly Latin or Italian, were forced to change their names to their original forms under penalty of 500 to 3,000 lire. According to article 2 of this decree, every non-Italian name could be changed into an Italian name by decree of the prefect, and according to article 3 of said decree these provisions could be applied to other provinces of Italy; in other words, to the entire Austrian Tyrol.

Another royal decree of January 10, 1926, No. 16, states that the Italian nationality granted to persons owing to their option according to the peace treaties can be revoked at any time if the national in question has been deemed unworthy of Italian nationality owing to his political attitude. It is expressly added in this decree that the revoking of Italian nationality may also lead to the seizure of his entire property.

A royal decree issued on January 26, 1926, forbids the teaching of German in the schools of the south Tyrol, a measure of the most far-reaching consequences in view of the fact that the children of that region learn nothing but German at home before they go to school.

A circular letter of November 27, 1925, addressed by the prefect of Trieste to the subprefects of Bozen, Meran, Brixen, Bruneck, and Cavalese goes to show how far the measures of the Italian Government regarding denationalization go, for by this letter the prefect orders that strict vigilance be kept over all private German schools, and especially over all teachers of German extraction, empowering the prefects, in order to achieve their aims of suppression of the German language, to use militia forces for the arrest of those considered guilty.

In view of all these measures, it is interesting to see the point of view taken by Italy with regard to her own minorities, such as still exist in Yugoslavia. Italy succeeded in obtaining from Yugoslavia a policy with regard to minorities laid out in conformity with Italian wishes in that respect. By a decree of September 24, 1923, this question is settled in detail, and Yugoslavia has given the Italians in her territory all possibilities of free development and entire liberty with regard to the use of their language, their associations, and their public meetings. The Italians are given the right to have schools of their own and teach the Italian language in Yugoslavia. Thus Italy has succeeded in realizing her demands on Yugoslavia with regard to her minorities—demands which are so much in contradiction to the policy she pursues as regards German minorities in the former Austrian Tyrol, and demands which are even more in contradiction to the promise given these minorities shortly after their territories were annexed on the conclusion of peace.

Mr. President, it is said that we can not collect this debt. I say we can. But we will never collect it so long as we are represented by men who want to give it away. How will we collect it? In the first place, sir, until Italy settles this debt Italy's credit is ruined, and Italy knows it. The trouble with the French franc to-day is not the balancing of the French budget but the fact that France is holding back and declining to meet her just obligations. Every man who invests money knows that he will not loan that money to a man who has repudiated his note at the bank or who has stopped payment upon his check justly given. No such man can borrow money unless he is able to deposit collateral back of the loan. No nation can repudiate its international obligations in dollars and cents and ever hope to establish its credit, and every man who is acquainted with matters of national finance knows that.

Great Britain came and settled. I am not going to say that Great Britain did it in order to reestablish her credit, for while I have criticized Great Britain many times upon this floor, there is this about an Englishman, that he does have regard for his obligations. There is this about the British Government, that in the long run of her history, with debts constantly increasing, Great Britain nevertheless has made her obligations good. She drove, I thought, a rather hard bargain with us. We yielded in some respects in which we ought not to have yielded. Nevertheless she did agree to pay us in full and agreed to pay an interest that was not outrageous and ridiculous.

But there was another reason, of course, in every English statesman's heart. He knew that when Great Britain had settled its debt, when she had said to all the world "The British Empire keeps faith," when she had signed on the dotted line and said, "We propose to do everything that is honorable in this matter," she knew that British credit would be sustained and strengthened throughout the world.

What has been the lesson? Although Great Britain suffered terribly in the war, although she is one of few countries that has not increased her population since the war, although she has a vast amount of unemployment, nevertheless the British credit stands almost to the apex and British exchange is equal in value of exchange to the dollar and rapidly crowding us for first position. Great Britain, if she ever again engages in a war and needs to borrow money, can on the credit of a faith well maintained come to America or go anywhere in the world and borrow that money. But will Italy ever be allowed to borrow any money in this country if she makes this settlement? Not while this generation lives, not while the memory of this infamy exists, not until repudiation has become a matter of honor and refusal to pay is certificate of honesty.

France must pay her debt. If we stand fast before she makes that settlement, I say to the Senator from Utah that if France says she can not pay, ask her to turn over to America the islands in the West Indies which command the control of the Panama Canal, islands that are of no financial benefit to her, but are of infinite value to us as a matter of defense. The credit of France is ruined, because France has repudiated up to this time to all intents and purposes her obligations to this country, because her papers and her public men have been declaring that France never ought to be asked to pay a dollar, although her name is on a paper promising solemnly upon the honor of the French Republic that she will pay. That is one way we can collect the debt. There is another way to collect it that I do not care to discuss on the floor of the Senate in open session.

What we need is a man as President, a man as Secretary of the Treasury, who is thinking about the American people and not about the bankers of New York and the bankers of Berlin and London. We are going to have that kind of man some day, but in the meantime when we are confronted with this situation Italy will hand us a contract in which we are told that we must accept 23 to 25 cents on the dollar, and they say, "What are you going to do about that?"

When that is handed to that future President who has a little red American blood in his veins and who will not be controlled by Wall Street, I hope the names of the Senators who put this black infamy upon our Republic, who robbed a helpless people who have never had a chance to express their opinions, will be handed along with the document.

Now, Mr. President, I am ready that Senators who favor this debt settlement with Italy shall vote on this question. They may consummate this infamy; they may refuse to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed for the purpose of making a change that can not be objected to by any reasonable man. They may ride in their party car, driven by the great financial interests, filled with the admiring throng of Republican Senators, with a few Democrats riding on the tail end.

I desire to say nothing unpleasant, but this debt settlement can not be justified in reason; it can not be justified in good conscience. The American people have never had an opportunity to pass upon it. Let it be brought in here after the next election. I challenge, I dare any man to postpone this measure until after that time. Then I challenge and dare any candidate to go before his people and say, "I am going to settle the Italian debt for from 23 to 25 cents on the dollar; I am going to extend its payment for 62 years, with annual payments of 1.1 per cent, and at the end of the 62 years the debt itself is to be wiped out. I am going to do this for the Government of Mussolini and for the people who permit him to sit there as a monstrous blot upon modern civilization, as a denial of every doctrine which we announced during the World War, as a repudiation of everything in the nature of freedom or democracy, as an insult to modern intelligence and modern civilization. I am going to do that." Do it in the State of Maine, if you dare; do it in the State of California, if you dare; do it in Oklahoma, if you dare; do it in any State of this Union. I can take a yellow dog with an honest record and beat any man who dares to make such an announcement to his people.

What thanks are we getting for all this? In France the name of America is hissed by every audience in every theater. In France the greatest newspaper of Paris only last week declared that they ought to make American tourists pay in gold; that thus they would pay five times as much as anybody else had to pay for food and lodging and whatever else they purchased; and that that would be only a just and proper way to treat these "pigs of Americans." They also complained bitterly that we were over there eating them out of house and home, eating the food that they might have, although we are paying a price they fix and giving them American gold for it, for while an American buys in francs over there he has to pay his gold in exchange for the francs or give them American exchange for the franc, which is the same as gold. Those are the thanks we get.

They received our boys with flowers and with kisses and with cheers, but now they hiss at us and spit upon us. There is to-day more good feeling for America, I apprehend, in Germany than there is in France. This is our experience. Give these foreigners a discount of 75 per cent and they will hate us just as badly for making them pay the 25 per cent as if we asked them for the whole amount. Give them a period of 62 years in which to pay and that means a period of 62 years in which they will hate us because they have to pay. The more we concede the more unreasonable will be their demands.

In the meantime their armed bodies are forming. Their "master's voice" is the voice of tyranny. His black shadow falls across the sunlit plains where peace has been once more established. The rattle of his sword is a discordant note in the restored harmony of the world. His credit will be established; his honor will be increased; his power will be magnified when his representative can report back that he has brought the great American Republic to its knees and has compelled it to settle for 25 cents on the dollar.

Senators may smile and smile. I hold no brief of threat; we all must vote our judgment; but since we are engaged in prophesying, let me prophesy. Since the members of this commission project their seerlike minds 62 years into the future, and say that for all that time Italy can not pay, may I be guilty of the temerity of saying that when the American people understand this settlement there will be a reckoning, and so far as I am concerned I am willing the reckoning shall be charged against Democrats as well as Republicans.

This is altogether the biggest steal in all history. At no other time was it proposed to give away a thousand million dollars by the votes of men who are voting away the money of the people instead of their own money.

What this country needs, sir, is a political upheaval. It needs a storm, and the storm will come. It will be a storm of ballots; it will be a peaceful revolution, if you please, but it will be accompanied, in my judgment, by indignation. It needs a storm that will take the deadwood that has been floated in here on political streams and cast it out of the waters. It needs a storm that will awaken the conscience of the American people to the betrayals that are being daily perpetrated upon them. It needs a storm that will clear the atmosphere so that the people on the Pacific coast as well as the people in the near vicinity may see how the hand of the New York financiers is reaching over and directing the affairs of this great Republic. I repeat, I am not enemy of honest capital; I believe in the protection of money; but, sir, whenever a country comes under the domination of money—not of men—when the clink of the dollar can be heard above the voices of the people—when a country reaches that condition nothing but a political storm and revolution will change the situation.

I do not hesitate to turn to my Democratic associates and to ask them again, as I have asked them on previous occasions, what is the Democratic Party here for? To join in all of these nefarious schemes? To unite with Mr. Mellon in all of his demands? Some days ago I heard my secretary, Mr. Hicklin Yates, define the modern Democrat. He said he was a man who worshiped at the shrine of Woodrow Wilson and voted with Andrew Mellon. [Laughter.]

We united with those across the aisle on a tax bill and abandoned the policy we had advocated here for years. If the Democrats had stood solid, there were enough insurgent Republican votes to have carried the day and have written the tax bill. We formed a coalition with the Republicans, and when Democrats coalesce with the hard-boiled element of the Republican Party they simply go into its digestive apparatus and they do not even disturb its stomach, for a Republican stomach can digest anything that has ever been produced in heaven above, the earth beneath, or the waters under the earth. [Laughter.]

I compliment them in one sense. They do have a policy; they do know what they are going to undertake. Even if it is a buccaneering expedition, it is well organized, and when they get through with the one they are on they have another one ready before the stupid Democrats over here find out what happens to them. [Laughter.]

We get up here on the floor of the Senate and stick pins in them. We deliver homilies about the President riding a hobby horse. That is the most innocent thing he ever did in his life and the most commendable. [Laughter.]

We make some flamboyant speeches here about Thomas Jefferson, the great principles of Thomas Jefferson; but Thomas Jefferson never wrote a law in all his life that was not a law granting greater liberties to the people. Every time his pen touched paper it was to declare once more for the old liberties and to demand new ones. The Bill of Rights, which sprang principally from his brain, was altogether a declaration of rights for the people. The statute of religious liberty was a declaration in favor of the right of man to worship and to think, to go to church or to stay away from church, to live under the bending skies of God and walk around like a man, each a sovereign, each man master of himself, each man restrained from interfering with the rights of his fellowman. But over here we can sit down with our little hammers and we can forge a little chain here; we can put a restriction there; we can get another padlock to place upon human rights; we can set up organizations to invade the home, to place their unholy hands upon the brow of motherhood. We can hear it advocated that the constabulary have the right to enter every home of the land if some ruffian bearing the badge of the Government sees fit to say he thinks there is beer in that house. We can hear the statement made by Senators that men who violate a law that is purely a malum prohibitum law, having no relation whatever to those things that are naturally called crimes, ought to be executed. The man who will talk about executing another man for making a bottle of beer is as much worse than the man who made the bottle of beer as murder is worse than making beer; and you can not sanctify murder, sir, by having a few gentlemen down in Congress say, "Be it enacted."

We talk about Thomas Jefferson, and we repudiate him in every breath. What is our policy to-day? Our policy chiefly is to find out where Andrew W. Mellon is going, and then fall in in an ignominious position at the tail end of the procession. No wonder the people of this country repudiate the Democratic Party! No wonder the only part of the country we hold is the solid South; and we would not hold the solid South to-day if it were not for the race question in the South.

I appeal to Democrats here to awaken to their duty to guard this country; for, with a Republican majority, the Lord God of Hosts knows that the country needs guardians constantly on watch, needs men in the towers, with ceaseless vigilance, to protect the rights of the American people. We have nothing of that kind to-day. We have not any more concert of action or continuity of purpose than a lot of chickens in a barnyard when an owl comes sailing across the sky.

This measure could have been beaten. If the Democratic Party had stood solidly there were enough votes on the other side of the Chamber to have defeated this measure; but the regular over there heard his master's voice. He wanted to have somebody appointed a United States marshal or a revenue collector or to fill some other job, and the word came down from the White House to all of these people: "Line up! Keep in line with Calvin Coolidge!" Not "Keep in line with the right"; not "Keep in line with justice"; not "Keep in line with the principles of equity and good conscience"; but "Keep in line with Calvin Coolidge! If you do not, you know you have not got those appointments yet out in your State." So they trekked in and took the regular, old-fashioned Republican lock step, hand on the shoulder, and lifting the left leg at the same time; and some day, when our vision has been improved by some wonderful invention as our ears have been improved by the radio, we will be able to observe the stripes upon the lock-step crowd that we can not see now with our dull eyes.

But over here what a crowd we are! I can admire efficiency, even if it is the efficiency of a highwayman or a bootlegger, each of them about equally contemptible; but I hold in immeasurable and unutterable contempt a body that is supposed to be an organization and that has no policy. If we do not rectify our conduct we ought to adjourn sine die and let some respectable organization come into the field that has some other policy than the mere reelection to their seats of the particular gentlemen now in office.

But coming back to this loan business, as nearly as I can make out, for this great act of national generosity and kindness extended in the hour of direst need, for this act that put food in the stomachs of the people of France and of Italy, for this act that put clothing upon their backs and shoes upon their feet, for this act that put arms in their hands and munitions in their belts, for this act that helped to stop the invading armies of Germany as they swept on into Italy and on into France, we receive their hatreds and their maledictions; and I can not help recurring to the wisdom of the philosophy of Shakespeare:

Neither a borrower nor a lender be,
For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.
This above all: To thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.

I commend the last line to the American Senate, and I send my condolences to a country helpless while the robbery is done.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if some one on the other side of this proposition desires to discuss it, I shall not impose myself upon the Senate at this time; but I suppose they are going to follow the usual custom of saying nothing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not the purpose of the junior Senator from Missouri to say nothing. I shall have something to say.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator can proceed then.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is quite true that "borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry" and "lending often loseth both itself and friend"; and it may well be that during a period of 62 years the relation of creditor and debtor that exists between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Italy may breed and continue to breed feelings of animosity and ill-will. It is always so, Mr. President. Relations of creditor and debtor are never desirable, especially between nations.

A trading with the enemy act was enacted by the Congress of the United States and under that act actually, previously to the declaration of war by the United States, during the period of war after the armistice, money was shoveled out of the Treasury of the United States to these foreign countries without reference to their capacity to pay, without reference to its being a good loan or not. It was done in the case of Italy. The laws were not observed, and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, for reasons which seem to me to be specious and not good, loaned $1,642,000,000 to the Government of Italy when it did not appear that that Government was worthy of that loan, that she had the capacity to pay, or that the debt would ever be returned. Just why the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, made those loans under those circumstances in violation of the laws that had been passed and of the terms under which the acknowledgments for those loans were to be taken does not appear.

Mr. President, the patron saint of our country is George Washington. The next great saint of our country is Abraham Lincoln. A golden thread of political thought and political philosophy runs from George Washington squarely through John Marshall, Webster, and Clay to Lincoln; and it survives, I trust, unto this good day.

The Republican Party does stand for something. It does represent great principles of government. It has a definite philosophy. Regardless of what its plans may be as to policies now or hereafter, there are underlying principles which can be stated, fundamentals of faith; and the creed of the Republican Party is neither hard to find nor difficult to defend.

We believe in the indivisibility of the citizenship of all the people of the United States. We believe in the right of every citizen in the United States to life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness. We believe that we belong to a party which has the capacity and is worthy to conduct the affairs of the Government of the United States under the Constitution of the United States and under the leadership of Calvin Coolidge.

I do not see that that has a tremendous amount to do with the particular problem that presents itself to us to-day. There is no man in the Senate more versed, more apt, more wonderful in the powers of oratory and the powers of argument than my colleague from Missouri [Mr. REED]. He belongs to one party; I belong to another. He is proud of the heritage which he possesses as coming from Thomas Jefferson. I am just as proud of the heritage that I claim comes from Washington and from John Marshall.

The question here to-day is the question of the reconsideration of the vote by which we adopted the Italian debt settlement. The question was raised at the last hour. The vote was to be taken on Wednesday at 4 o'clock. When the bell rang at 4 o'clock, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] proposed an amendment. That amendment went to the third, fifth, and seventh clauses of our settlement with Italy. I felt at that time that time was not of the essence of our settlement with Italy. Inasmuch as we receive but $5,000,000 per year for a period of five years without interest, it did not occur to me that time would make so much difference. My understanding was that the Senator from Nebraska had introduced an amendment to the plan, which permitted the bonds which we are to receive under this settlement to be sold, maybe in Italy; and if sold there, that the effect of such a sale of those bonds in Italy to the Italian people might result in a value for those bonds which they would not have if the rights of the Italian people to invest in those bonds were foreclosed by the provisions of the pending settlement.

I therefore voted for the amendment as offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL]. That, it seems to me, is the one question pending in this case to-day. My understanding is—and I get it from the Senator from Nebraska—that his amendment is an exact copy of the provision under which similar bonds received by the British Government from Italy on its settlement with Italy bear in the agreement made between the English and the Italian Governments. It reads as follows:

The principal and interest of all bonds issued or to be issued hereunder shall be paid without deduction for, and shall be exempt from any and all taxes and other public dues, present or future, imposed by or under authority of the Kingdom of Italy or any political or local taxing authority within the Kingdom of Italy.

The Senator from Nebraska has explained his amendment. It has been expatiated on somewhat at length by my colleague, the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I have heard no statement from the chairman of the Finance Committee as to whether or not the provisions contained in the pending agreement between this Government and Italy are there by design, and are intended to foreclose the purchase of these securities in Italy by the citizens of Italy.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no such intention, and I will say to the Senator that the exact words contained in this settlement have been in every settlement that has been made with any foreign country.

If the Senator will be further patient with me, I want to say that in the English settlement with Italy the following is incorporated:

1. Italy agrees to pay, and Great Britain to accept, in satisfaction of the aforesaid war debt, the following annuities:

In respect of the current financial year, £2,000,000.

In respect of the next two financial years, £4,000,000 a year.

In respect of the next four financial years, £4,250,000 a year.

In respect of succeeding financial years, until 1986-87, £4,500,000 a year.

In respect of the financial year 1987-88, £2,250,000.

The above payments will be made in sterling at the Bank of England, London, on the 15th March, 1926, and thereafter in equal half-yearly installments on the 15th September and 15th March of each year, so that the last payment will be made on the 15th September, 1987.

Now—

2. Italy will issue and deliver to the British treasury on or before the 20th February, 1926, a bond substantially in the form set out in the annex to this agreement in respect of each of the payments provided for in article 1 of this agreement.

3. The payments due under all bonds issued in accordance with this agreement shall be made without deduction for, and shall be exempt from any and all taxes and other public dues, present or future, imposed by or under authority of Italy or any political or local taxing authority within Italy.

That is because of the fact that there is no interest whatever on the annuities. It is an annuity plan, pure and simple. Our settlement is not an annuity plan. Our settlement is so much upon the principal, and so much interest. Not only that, but there is a provision in our settlement that those annual payments shall be given in a bond, first, for each of the payments, but we reserve the right to call upon Italy at any time and have them issue those bonds in just the denominations that we may demand. The provision to which the Senator has referred is in the exact words used in the English settlement and in every settlement we have made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator means in the exact words of the settlement between America and England?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is the only resemblance between the settlement made with America and that made with England, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. There is not a resemblance, because the settlement with England is 39 per cent better for Italy than is ours. That can be demonstrated—I stated that before—and I can prove it to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that the Senator from Utah stated the other day, in answer to a question put to him by the Senator from Michigan, that the bonds had been taken in denominations indicated in the various yearly payments, beginning at $5,000,000 and ending at $80,000,000, or whatever the amount was; that they had been taken in those denominations so as to prevent, if possible, the negotiation of those bonds among small holders in America, and thus prevent causes of irritation raised by our citizens for the nonpayment of the bonds. I thought that was a very good answer to the question put by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say again, for the information of the Senator and of the Senate, that the bonds that are to be issued by the Italian Government to Britain remain in the vaults of the British Government. That is the only place they will ever go. Under the arrangement we have with them we can have the bonds issued in different denominations, if we desire, as I have stated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Exactly; they are susceptible of change.

Mr. SMOOT. They are susceptible of change.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or they are susceptible of conversion into bonds of smaller denominations?

Mr. SMOOT. They are.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was because the Senator from Nebraska had had no opportunity to give us his views with respect to the amendment he offered that I was in favor of a reconsideration of the vote. It gave us an opportunity to go into that phase of the case.

Mr. SMOOT. In brief, the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska means this: Suppose we had a thousand-dollar bond. The Senator wants that bond reduced in value, I suppose, in the same amount the debt had been reduced, or 26 per cent of that amount, and then that to draw a rate of interest, and sold to a man anywhere in the country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is a good mathematical way of doing that.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; but I want to ask the Senator this: How on earth are we ever going to be able to sell those bonds to Italian citizens when Italy to-day is suffering from lack of funds? If we did undertake to sell the bonds in Italy, how many could we sell? If we did succeed in selling any, what would it mean? It would mean that it would to that extent interfere with Italy's ability to pay us what she has contracted to pay.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand the Senator from Nebraska, however, the present plan—the plan undertaken in the present agreement—precludes the possibility of selling the bonds in Italy, except under penalty of having them taxed in Italy.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, if they are sold there, Italy can impose a tax on them if she desires to do so, under the Italian laws, just as England can do under the existing arrangements we have with England. There is not a particle of difference.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, why does the Senator compare this with the British settlement? Why does he pick out one clause in the British settlement which, he tells us, does not exempt England's bonds to us from taxation in Great Britain and use that as an illustration of the wisdom of this settlement, when all the rest of the British settlement is so radically different, when England's bonds are, first, marketable all around the world, and when, second, England proposes to pay us dollar for dollar, at a low rate of interest, but, nevertheless, to pay us? Then the Italian settlement was written, under which they are to pay about 23 cents on the dollar; and I question whether we could sell the bonds at 10 cents to-day if we had them. The Senator says because there was a favorable clause in the British settlement we ought to put that in the Italian settlement, but we are not going to put into the Italian settlement the good propositions that are contained in the English settlement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the question as to the difference was raised, and I answered that. But I will say to the Senator from Missouri that the settlement we have made with Italy is a 39 per cent better settlement, as far as dollars and cents are concerned, than the settlement England made with Italy.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly it is 39 per cent; and because it is 39 per cent better for us the Senator says we ought to put in the Italian settlement this clause, which makes our bonds worthless in Italy.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it does not make them worthless in Italy. It simply is a clause that has been in every settlement we have made, not only with Great Britain but every country with which we have settled.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator gives these figures as a settlement favorable to Great Britain or favorable to us because of the present value of the settlement. Is not that true?

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator state that again?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator said that our settlement is more favorable than the settlement between Italy and Great Britain?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true on the valuation of the present worth. That is what the Senator based it on, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Comparisons were based upon that situation.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator realizes that the English settlement is better than the American settlement, because England gets $113,000,000 during the first 10 years more than we get. In other words, they want to collect all their money in the beginning of the settlement, and we wait 62 years from now to get ours.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a matter that has been discussed. It is a question of policy. It is a question of ability to pay on the part of Italy.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator thought the wise and economic policy was to let Great Britain have their money in the beginning and we should collect ours 50 or 60 years from now?

Mr. SMOOT. They pay for it, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. They pay for it?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Here is an article in the morning Herald which says:

France is going to agree to the same settlement because they believe America will cancel the debt in a few years.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator believes everything that he sees in the papers as reported by somebody who has no knowledge whatever and can get no better information than anyone else, he is relying upon information which would never enable us to get a settlement. We never would know what they could do even a year hence based on such information. I would like to have some evidence before I would take a clipping from some newspaper as to what they can do.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me read just what the New York Herald said. The Senator may say there is nothing in these reports, but I have not yet found, where every newspaper syndicate carries the same story and all written along the same line, that they are generally wrong. They get these things from somewhere, and every press service in the country carried the story last night. In the New York Herald-Tribune was this article written by Mr. Carter Field, and he is pretty close to the White House and pretty close to the Treasury Department here.

It is known also that the willingness of the French to agree to such heavy payments later on is based to a considerable extent upon the belief that these payments will never have to be made. They are confident that this country will have a change of heart which will result in a forgiving of the debt long before the payments have reached their peak.

The difference between the English settlement and the Italian settlement was that the English tried to get all they could in the beginning. We let them have it, too. In addition to that, Great Britain received $110,000,000 in gold since 1915 from Italy and retains it. It is there for England to use.

Mr. SMOOT. I could give the Senator some information about it again, but there is no necessity for it.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope some day the Senator will give it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no necessity for it in this discussion.

Mr. HARRISON. I know, because the Senator has the votes to pass the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is not what the Senator said.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Utah made the statement that Britain is to receive an annuity. Certainly that does not mean that it is any more of an annuity than what we are to receive. In one sense of the word an annuity is an equal payment over a period of years. That is not the case with Great Britain. The first payment to Great Britain is about $14,000,000. It then jumps to $24,000,000, and it then varies down until the final payment is about $10,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. But the agreement itself says it is an annuity. The agreement says in plain language:

Italy agrees to pay and Great Britain to accept in satisfaction of the aforesaid war debt the following annuities.

Mr. HOWELL. Very well. We now have a definition and know when payments are annuities. I hold in my hand a statement from the Treasury Department of the United States that gives the amount of payments made annually by Italy with no reference to interest. They are $5,000,000 to begin with, and it gives the total payment for the last year as $80,988,000. Each of these payments is exactly as much of an annuity as the payments to be made to Great Britain by Italy.

The distinguished Senator from Utah stated that these bonds were to remain in the British Treasury. These bonds contain the same provision that our bonds have—it is identical—"payable to Great Britain or order." The 62 bonds which we receive are payable to the United States or order. There is no more reason to urge that these bonds will remain in the British Treasury than that our bonds will necessarily remain in our Treasury. They are assignable in each case. They are not made payable to Great Britain only. They are assignable and so are our bonds. There is no difference.

Furthermore, as to the sale of these bonds in Italy, the Debt Commission, of which the distinguished Senator from Utah is a member, has provided as follows in article 7 of the agreement:

In order to facilitate the sale of the bonds in the United States, in Italy, and elsewhere, * * * Italy "will use its good offices to secure the listing of the bonds on such stock exchanges as the Secretary of the Treasury * * * may specify."

The Debt Commission had in mind the sale of these bonds in Italy. It inserted in the agreement the provision I have read, and yet the Senator has said that there was no such idea in mind. What is the meaning of this agreement? It seems to mean one thing at one time and another thing at other times. They included in the agreement a provision contemplating the sale of these bonds in Italy, and then what? They insert a taxable provision that will make it impossible to sell the bonds in Italy.

Mr. President, article 7 is absolutely rendered ineffective by article 3 of the agreement. There is no question but that according to the terms of the settlement it points to a purpose of providing for the sale of bonds in Italy, but after this had been taken care of then they put in a provision that will prevent such sales. That is the trouble with the settlement. I can not believe that the members of the Debt Commission understood the agreement—what the agreement meant—any more than they realized that the settlement really provides for the payment of but 1.1 per cent interest for 62 years and then the cancellation of the debt—$2,150,151,000—at the end of the period.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. A distinction is drawn between an annuity and the kind of payments we get. We have had a lot of cavilling about terms. What difference does it make or would it make if it were the fact that Italy had said, "We will pay the United States an annuity of $5,000,000 a year" or "We will pay the United States in interest and principal $5,000,000 a year." What would be the difference? It would be $5,000,000 in our pocket in either event, and the name under which we got it would not make much difference to the gentlemen in the United States if Italy had the money to take up its obligations. That sort of argument is puerile.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the vote day before yesterday on this resolution carried "glad tidings of good news" to at least two places in the world. One was Rome, and the other was the administrative offices here in Washington. We have not seen the glare from any bonfires celebrating it out in the Middle West. We have not read in the papers where the people were thrilled in any other part of the country.

I read from yesterday afternoon's Washington Star an item carried by the Associated Press from Rome, merely in order that the Record may be brightened through the ages by this article and in order that posterity may know how the Senate's action was received by Mussolini and Fascists in Italy. I do not read it with the hope that it might change any votes here, because I know the sails are set and the wind is full. All conditions are favorable to carry this ratification by a majority as it was carried day before yesterday:

Rome, April 22.—Ratification of the Italian war debt settlement by the United States Senate brings warm expressions of gratification from high governmental officials. Premier Mussolini, after reading the first bulletin last evening, said, "I am most happy to hear the news."

To-day similar expressions came from Finance Minister Count Volpi, who headed the debt mission to Washington, and Dino Grandi, the undersecretary for foreign affairs. Count Volpi asked the Associated Press to send his "grateful greetings to the American Government—

Not to the American people, but he sends his grateful greetings to the American Government—who sustained with such firmness and loyalty the agreed settlement."

I do not know to whom he was referring when he used the term "loyalty." It must be loyalty to Italy, certainly not loyalty to the American taxpayer. He said further:

"Indeed," he added, "I wish to send the same greetings to all those Senators who participated in the long discussion with such fervid friendship toward our country. On the other hand, I prefer to forget some of the unjust speeches pronounced in the American Senate, because I attribute them to inexact knowledge of the Italian situation."

He further explained this thought by saying emphatically, "Italy lives in a régime of liberty, tranquillity, and work such as she never experienced before."

During the long and often painful discussion in the American Senate—

Why he snatched the word "painful" to express his ideas, I do not know, but he used the term.

During the long and often painful discussion in the American Senate I considered my duty as a member of the government signatory to the agreement to maintain the greatest reserve, but now that the agreement is ratified with a noteworthy majority, and now that the American people have given new proof of acknowledging that the agreement is an equitable transaction—

He is mistaken about that. The American people have not given their acknowledgment to this settlement. It is left to be seen in November what they have to say about it. Some Senators had better get busy reading what has been said in the Senate—they do not stay in the Senate to listen to it—so that they may explain to their constituents in the coming campaign their favoritism and friendship toward Italy as against taxpayers of America—

thus pronouncing a new word of sympathy and friendship toward the Italian people, I feel free to say how much we appreciate all this and how satisfied I am. Ratification of the agreement has great significance not only for the relations between America and Italy, but also for European relations in general.

Signor Grandi, speaking for the Italian Government, said: "We are deeply touched by the declarations made by Secretary Mellon after the ratification."

Secretary Mellon gave out an interview; he expressed himself as delighted that the Senate had ratified this agreement; but Italy need not mistake the expressions and views of the Secretary of the Treasury as being the views of the American people—

Signor Grandi, speaking for the Italian Government, said: "We are deeply touched by the declarations made by Secretary Mellon after the ratification. Coming from a representative of the executive branch of the United States Government, they are particularly significant and welcome."

"By Premier Mussolini's instructions"—

"By Premier Mussolini's instructions"—

"they will have wide diffusion in the press of the entire Nation and will serve to strengthen the already firm ties of cordial friendship between the two nations."

He is going to scatter them out everywhere through Italy, and it may be that they will be scattered broadcast over here—

Ratification of the debt accord is considered by the Italian Government as a moral and political victory for Fascism, according to foreign office spokesman. Italy, he pointed out, had regarded the accord as a purely financial matter until, during the last few months both in the senatorial discussion and the comments of certain sections of the American press, the political aspect of the question was brought to the fore.

It became a struggle between Fascism and anti-Fascism—between so-called democracy and dictatorship, Signor Grandi said.

Let me read that again to the Senator from Utah and to those Senators who on the roll call the other day voted for the ratification of this agreement. This is Signor Grandi, the spokesman of the Italian Government, speaking to the world, not only to the Italian people but to the American people:

It became a struggle between Fascism and anti-Fascism—between so-called democracy and dictatorship.

As suggested to me by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] he ought to send the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] a black shirt [laughter], and he ought also to send black shirts to some other Senators who voted to ratify this agreement.

But I am unable to refrain from drawing the obvious conclusion that the Senate's action now means more than ratification of a financial arrangement; that it also represents a moral victory for Fascism and a political victory for present-day Italy in the eyes of America and the world.

That is what you have done, Senators. The Senator from Utah speaks of our agreement with Italy being more favorable in its terms to the United States than the Italian agreement with Great Britain is to Great Britain. The statesmen of Great Britain have "put it all over" the representatives of America in their negotiations with Italy. The Senator from Utah runs to cover as to the proposition which is presented in the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], when he knows that Italy has not deposited in Washington $120,000,000 in gold. Italy has had no deposit of gold here in Washington since 1915. Under the terms of the British agreement with Italy, however, Italy has permitted $120,000,000 of gold to remain in London, and it is to stay there under the terms of the agreement, except as to certain sums which may be released from time to time upon payments of portions of the indebtedness. The Senator from Utah recognizes that the English statesmen tried to get as much out of Italy in their settlement in the earlier years as possible; that they were not much interested in the period 20, 30, 40, 50, or 60 years from now; but it seems that the Senator from Utah and his colleagues on the Debt Commission thought more of getting some kind of a settlement; that they cared nothing about how much was to be realized during the few years in the early life of the agreement, just so it might appear that the present worth might be more than the payment to Great Britain in the end.

Here [exhibiting] are figures prepared by Mr. McCoy, the actuary of the Treasury Department, in which he shows all down the line in parallel columns that even as far off as the year 1936 America will get only $15,000,000, while at that time Great Britain will be getting $21,000,000; that until 1940 Great Britain will be collecting annually more than the United States will be collecting; and yet the Senator from Utah thinks that he has won a great victory.

If the Senators who are to come up for reelection in November, whether in Ohio or Indiana or out midst the Golden Gate of California or in Utah or in New York or in Massachusetts or in Kansas, or anywhere else, even in Nevada and in Arizona—if they think they can defend the ratification of an agreement with Italy that will make the American taxpayer in 62 years pay $3,680,870,000, while the Italian taxpayer will be paying only $369,677,000 in interest charges, then well and good.

I can not believe that they can do it. I do not believe there was ever presented to the American Congress a more nefarious and indefensible proposition than is presented in this Italian debt-settlement measure. It is discriminatory; it is unfair; it shows a degree of favoritism that is inexcusable. Yet Senators try to press it and force it through here even by the threat of a motion to table a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. Why all this haste? The Republican majority showed no such haste as this when they were trying to give some relief to the American taxpayers by the revenue bills which have come before the Senate.

In 1921 we passed a revenue bill which reduced the taxes of the American people $670,000,000; but Senators on the other side showed no such degree of impatience in pressing that measure to a vote as they show now. In 1924, not along party lines but by the cooperation of Members of both parties in the Senate and House of Representatives, a further reduction of $472,000,000 was made in the taxes of the American taxpayers; and then in 1926 a further reduction of $387,000,000 was made. The Republican majority claimed those reductions as great achievements. And they were. You were entitled to much credit because your party was in power. I shall not speak of the details that divided the two parties along the lines of reducing the taxes on some as against others, but we gave a reduction in the total sum of $1,529,000,000. The Republican Party claimed it, as I have said, as an achievement. They went home and prated about it, and yet they bring here and press for consideration, even holding a motion to table over our heads, a bill that takes away every cent and more of the money that we gave by way of a reduction of taxes for the last five years. If they can answer it, all right.

I know on this motion we are defeated. I suppose we will get no more votes than we got the other day, but we go down with our colors flying, and the majority will answer for it elsewhere than here.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has just said that our Republican friends are going to suffer great losses by reason of their action on the Italian war debt settlement bill. I am inclined to think they are, but I want to congratulate them on one accession which they have made by reason of this settlement. I read from an Associated Press dispatch sent out immediately after the Italian debt settlement agreement was ratified on April 21. It reads as follows:

Doheny now Republican. Oil magnate, for years Democratic leader, switches affiliation. Los Angeles, Calif., April 22.—

April 22 was the next day after Senators on the other side had ratified the agreement by which they gave to Mussolini's Government a billion and a half dollars—

Edward L. Doheny, the oil magnate, for years a wheel horse of the Democratic Party, has hitched his political affiliations to Republican ranks.

"I have registered as a Republican for the first time," he said to-day, "because I decided to affiliate with and support the party which more than any other embodies the forces and policies which have produced our unprecedented era of prosperity."

And he might well have added that he has decided to affiliate with that party which fights with such heroic courage on the same side with Fascism and with dictatorship. Our Republican friends have ratified this agreement by their numbers, but, in my judgment, they have ratified it to the undoing of many of them at the next election.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to reconsider the vote by which House bill 6773 was passed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when Mr. FLETCHER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is unavoidably absent. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. POST]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay."

PARK AND PLAYGROUND SYSTEM OF THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

Mr. JONES of Washington. I submit a conference report on behalf of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and I ask for its immediate consideration. I think there will be no debate upon it.

The report was read and agreed to, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5830) amending the act entitled "An act providing for a comprehensive development of the park and playground system of the National Capital," approved June 6, 1924, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4785) to enable the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission to complete the acquisition of the land authorized to be acquired by the public buildings appropriation act, approved March 4, 1913, for the connecting parkway between Rock Creek Park, the Zoological Park, and Potomac Park, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

WILLIAM H. KING,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

F. N. ZIHLMAN,
ERNEST W. GIBSON,
THOS. L. BLANTON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall not ask for the immediate consideration of the conference report, because it probably will lead to considerable discussion. This is a measure that involves a question of contributions upon the part of the District of Columbia and the Federal Government in reference to appropriations. I ask that the report lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will lie on the table.

STATUE OF DR. CRAWFORD W. LONG

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the proceedings on March 30, 1926, in Statuary Hall of the Capitol, on the occasion of the unveiling and presentation by the State of Georgia of the marble statue of Dr. Crawford W. Long. Doctor Long was the first to use an anesthetic in a surgical operation.

There being no objection, the proceedings were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATUE OF DR. CRAWFORD W. LONG

EXERCISES IN STATUARY HALL IN THE CAPITOL AT WASHINGTON, D. C., TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 1926, ON THE OCCASION OF THE UNVEILING AND PRESENTATION BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA OF THE MARBLE STATUE OF DR. CRAWFORD W. LONG (1815-1878) THE DISCOVERER OF ETHER ANESTHESIA

The audience was called to order at 3 o'clock p. m. by Dr. Frank K. Boland, president of the Long Memorial Association, presiding.

INVOCATION BY REV. SAM W. SMALL

Our Heavenly Father, we are gathered to-day in this great national capital, and in a historic chamber of this great building whose atmosphere has thrilled to the eloquence of some of the greatest men of our generation and of generations gone by. We are assembled to represent the citizens of one of the great States of this immutable Union of ours, for the purpose of unveiling to the eyes of the living and to those of the coming generations the marble effigy of one of Thy humble and noble souls, who, inspired by Thy spirit of compassion to humanity, discovered the remedy and the soothing for the acute pains which formerly accompanied the incisions or the excisions of surgery upon the human body. This discovery and application by this faithful and honored son of Georgia has gone around the globe, to assuage the pains of humanity, to bring relief to millions who are suffering from that which to them seems incurable; and we pray that while we perform this sacred office of putting among those who occupy this Valhalla of the Nation's genius, of the Nation's spirit, who represented its religion, its statesmanship, and its eloquence, that his figure may be looked upon by the passing throngs for ages to come as that of one of the great benefactors of the human race, inspired to perform His will unto His children. Let Thy spirit cover the occasion; bless all those who have engaged in the noble enterprise now concluded; and may the spirit which animated this humble country doctor of Georgia become the universal spirit of all of us who would serve Thee in faithfulness, and our brethren with the spirit of helpfulness. We ask it all for Christ's sake. Amen.

Doctor BOLAND, Ladies and gentlemen, after years of patience and disappointment I assure you it is no mere formality when I say that it gives me almost overwhelming pleasure, on behalf of the Crawford W. Long Memorial Association, to welcome this distinguished audience to the exercises of the unveiling of the statue of Georgia's illustrious son, Crawford W. Long.

Eighty-four years ago, March 30, 1842, at the age of 27, his sympathy and love for suffering humanity, his keen power of observation, and his supreme courage led him to be the first to do, finally, what physicians and scientists had tried in vain to accomplish for all the centuries—to perform a surgical operation without producing pain. By this achievement, in that remote, isolated Georgia village, the young physician gave to mankind a blessing for which no praise, no expression of gratitude can be too great.

Most appropriate it was then, when in 1902 the General Assembly of Georgia voted to accept the invitation of the National Government to place the statues of two of its citizens in this sacred hall, that Crawford W. Long should be chosen as one of the number; the only physician, with one exception, to be thus honored by any State with a recognition of his contribution to medical science.

For 21 years we waited for the State of Georgia to carry out the resolution which it had adopted. Then, four years ago, through the inspiration and loyalty and persistent energy of a faithful apprentice who had worked in Doctor Long's drug store in the classic city of Athens, there came into existence the Crawford W. Long Memorial Association, with the determination to place this memorial here at the earliest possible moment. To-day, through the activity of this organization and the liberality of the people of Georgia and their efforts, you will see the realization of our dreams, done in Georgia marble, to be surpassed by none, the beautiful product of the imagination of a master sculptor, John Massey Rhind, executed by a superb carver, James K. Watt.

It is a proud day in the history of our State; it is a memorable occasion in the history of medicine; it is a glorious hour in the life of the former young apprentice; it is an event to bring unspeakable joy to the hearts of those two dear daughters of Doctor Long who honor us with their presence here to-day.

The first speaker is Dr. Joseph Jacobs, who was Doctor Long's assistant, now an authority in botany and pharmacy, an outstanding citizen and philanthropist, representing the pharmacists of America.

ADDRESS BY JOSEPH JACOBS, PH. M., SC. D., FOR THE PHARMACEUTICAL PROFESSION; FRIEND AND FORMER EMPLOYEE OF CRAWFORD W. LONG

Mr. Chairman and daughters of Doctor Long, ladies and gentlemen, an ardent love and admiration for Georgia is a known characteristic of her people. Yielding to none of her sister States in loyalty or readiness for service to our great compact of union, our people at the same time are prone to look with pride upon the achievements of Georgia's sons who have done so much to promote the general welfare.

Her very origin was an experiment in the history of nations. It was the first time that a charter was taken and granted for the purpose of removing the hopeless and the distressed from the old country and bringing them to the new, where they could achieve independence and prosperity. The generations have passed, and Georgia's sons have always shown a feeling of helpfulness to the poor and the distressed. It will be found that all the generations of Georgia's sons since Oglethorpe landed at Yamacraw Bluff have borne a spirit of sympathy and helpfulness in their breasts toward the unfortunate, the suffering, or the forlorn.

As a pharmacist it was my great good fortune in my early days to be an apprentice and student in the drug store in the town of Athens, Ga., owned and operated by the man whom we commemorate to-day, and I was the recipient of many kindnesses at his hands, and I am here to testify to the greatness of this man in every respect; as a physician, kind and gentle; and as a friend, loyal and true; as a citizen, brave, wise, and patriotic.

All the nations of the earth commemorate this man, whose discovery lessened pain, and the danger and the terror of the surgeon's knife.

The skilled and gentle ministrations of the learned physician were his; the tender love for family and for friends he ever exhibited in acts of kindness; the poor and distressed found in him ever a ready and helpful sympathy; his city and State knew him as patriotic, brave, and wise.

For my humble part, may I, in reverence, be permitted to say, as Robert Burns said of his Glencairn—

"The bridegroom may forget the bride
Was made his wedded wife yestern;
The monarch may forget the crown
That on his head an hour has been;

The mother may forget the child
That smiles sweetly on her knee;
But I'll remember thee, my friend,
And all that thou has done for me."

[Applause.]

Doctor BOLAND. The statue will now be unveiled by Mrs. Frances Long Taylor and Miss Emma Long, the daughters of Crawford W. Long.

The statue at this point was unveiled.

Doctor BOLAND. Crawford W. Long graduated from the University of Georgia with an A. M. degree in the year 1835. While at the university his roommate was Alexander H. Stephens, afterwards vice president of the Confederacy, who is the other Georgian chosen to have his statue placed in this hall.

The presentation of this statue to the State of Georgia will be by Hon. Richard B. Russell, chief justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Georgia, and president of the board of trustees of the University of Georgia, who was one of the incorporators of this memorial association, an eminent jurist, and a beloved citizen of Georgia.

ADDRESS OF HON. RICHARD B. RUSSELL, CHIEF JUSTICE SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF GEORGIA AND PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, to one whose station has denied the privilege of playing any part in the great drama enacted in this our National Capitol, a call to speak in the Hall of Fame of America (fit reproduction alike of the Parthenon at Athens and the Pantheon at Rome), is naturally not without embarrassment. However, the setting of this splendid and historic scene should itself suffice to supply inspiration. I am most fortunate, too, in the manner in which I have been presented by one of the most distinguished alumni of Georgia's University, itself the oldest State institution of learning in the Union. Dr. Frank K. Boland, as chief executive of the Crawford W. Long Memorial Association, has displayed the highest executive ability. He it was who concentrated and vitalized in practical form the disassociated elements of affection which prior to his leadership, not working in concert, had more than once failed to provide a fitting memorial to a great discoverer. By this great physician and scientist, worthy successor of Long, to-day the work crowns the thought, and the tribute of a mother's love and pride stands before us.

Speaking for the Crawford W. Long Memorial Association, I deem it most appropriate to express to him the gratitude of every one who truly loves the memory of Long. I am greatly honored also to follow and to speak from the same stage with him who of all Georgians is the one who should most appropriately have been selected to speak upon this occasion. It is well known that for many years the claim that Dr. Crawford W. Long, of Georgia, was the first to use sulphuric ether for the alleviation of pain was strenuously contested. No man ever devoted himself more continuously, more unreservedly, more laboriously, or more unselfishly to procuring, compiling, publishing, and establishing forever by legally competent testimony Doctor Long's right to his discovery than Dr. Joseph Jacobs, who has just preceded me. Neither Jonathan's love for David nor Damon's devotion to Pythias, as idealized in history and romance, exceeded the love of Doctor Jacobs to his preceptor, Doctor Long, and his unswerving, unalterable determination that justice should be done him.

Under the constitution of Georgia the general assembly is without power to appropriate money except for named purposes of government. Consequently, although the general assembly—upon the passage of the act of Congress requesting each State to place two of its most distinguished citizens in the hall of fame—selected Crawford W. Long and Alexander H. Stephens and reserved for them the places here, it was without power to appropriate any money to place their statues here. The stone we dedicate to-day represents private contribution of numerous Georgians, but whether including or aside from the matter of money, it is but a matter of justice that I should say what can not be contradicted that but for the devoted and continuous services of Joseph Jacobs the spot graced by his form and devoted to Doctor Long would be as bare as is that empty space designed to support a lasting memorial to the great Alexander H. Stephens.

Here, to the house of our fathers, we Georgians have come. In this, our fathers' house, we are at home. Loving every section of this great Union, our hearts are thrilled as we see preserved in ever-enduring bronze or imperishable stone the great Americans, with whom we are proud to claim brotherhood, whose effigies our sister States have presented as a lasting contribution to our common fame. Who is not thrilled as he casts his eyes toward New Hampshire and sees the lion of oratory, whose unanswerable arguments, clothed with all the force of logic and dignity of diction, shook Senate after Senate at his pleasure—the incomparable Daniel Webster! What American who loves to contemplate masterful masculinity, great initiative, and uncontrollable courage, is not thrilled as he beholds the heroic statue of Ethan Allen, the hero of Ticonderoga! He who ought remembers can never forget the incomparable services of that great American which the mother of States and statesmen lent to the Union. He who was "first in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of his countrymen"—the incomparable Washington. Here stand around us—an inspiration, not only to us, but to those who shall ever hereafter follow us in the long march of the centuries—Clay and Jackson and Austin and Lincoln and Garfield, statesmen and scholars and soldiers and inventors and patriots, to each and all of whom a reunited country acknowledges an ineffaceable debt of gratitude for immortal services.

To-day we come in behalf of the citizens who have contributed to its creation and of the university, which trained his fledgling wings to mount in the bold cerulean blue of knowledge, in the clear ether of culture and science, to present the statue of Crawford W. Long. We place his effigy under the dome of this magnificent Capitol of many multiplied millions of the greatest people on the face of the earth. We bring him home to his father's house. His life's labors—as are theirs—well done, these noble men—brothers all—like brethren shall enjoy together the surcease of that noontide which intervenes between things mortal and the immortal life which follows resurrection. We place him beneath the protecting folds of the ensign of our country, the flag of freedom—the flag of a nation which represents in its future destiny, as in its past history, more for the welfare of humanity than any emblem ever swept by the breezes of heaven. Fully conscious of the greatness of those in whose company we place him, Georgia feels neither hesitation nor abashment. He will stand among peers, but here he is the equal of any.

It may be said that he was only a modest physician in a small, though cultured, country town. It may be thought that from a long line of statesmen and soldiers, who have added luster to her name, the imperial Commonwealth of the South might have chosen her representatives upon this floor.

The youngest daughter of the original thirteen has given to this Union many men of superabundant worth. In statesmanship William M. Crawford, John Forsyth, John McPherson Berrien, Walter T. Colquitt, Robert Toombs, Benjamin H. Hill were all men of national reputation. She has furnished to the Supreme Court of the United States three justices. Two of her sons have presided as Speakers of the National House of Representatives. In one administration or another Georgians have filled all of the original seats in the Cabinet of the President of the United States. In arms the services of Georgians have not been less conspicuous. From Lacklan McIntosh to John B. Gordon, from the Revolutionary period until the close of the late World War, in no war in which Old Glory has been unfurled has Georgia courage and Georgia talent ever failed. It was, therefore, not for lack of statesmen or martial heroes that the General Assembly of Georgia selected to perpetuate for all time the memory of him whose statue stands before us.

By the decree of Almighty God the great men who shall in this hall of fame keep company with him did service for this our great Nation of incomparable and everlasting value. Human thoughts can not compass, nor can speech befittingly express the golden debt of gratitude which every true American will freely and joyously accord them in return. To some of them, all citizens of these sovereign but United States owe our independence from foreign rule or foreign domination; to others in this hall of fame we owe the Constitution, which alike nurtures all its children with one hand, while with the other it justly and sternly represses any attempted invasion by the powerful upon the rights of the weak.

To others in this great company of stony silence all of us now acknowledge an everlasting debt for the preservation of the Union. And equally much do patriotic Americans now and for all time hereafter owe to those matchless spirits of the North who, joining the gallant heroes of the gray in the godlike fraternal spirit of the martyred Lincoln, properly at last reconstructed this Union. Not a reconstruction of revenge and hate, of superiority on the one hand and of subordinate inferiority on the other, but a reconstruction in the equality of a brotherhood of the full blood, to the end that we enjoy for all time that peace for which General Grant prayed, and thus bring true the matchless words of yonder Webster when he said, "Liberty and Union, one and inseparable, now and forever."

The services of these, though priceless, were confined by national boundaries. But the service of him to whom we consecrate this shaft is world-wide. Under whatever skies pain and suffering may be found, from the Arctic to the Antarctic Zone, from the barren Steppes of Siberia or the frozen fields of Labrador to where the wild winds of the south sweep the inhospitable shores of Tierra del Fuego, the discovery of Long comes as a panacea to soothe human suffering and woe. No calculation can be made which can compute the value of the services this Georgian gave to humanity. Ordinarily those who fight, wage war under and have a flag and only one, the flag of their particular country. The cause to which Doctor Long contributed is the same everywhere, a single common cause—relief from pain. I deem it, therefore, most appropriate that this great discoverer should be a Georgian. It is most fitting that Georgia, from her great store of great men, proudly should have selected this great discoverer as her worthy representative in this assemblage of the sister States.

The discovery of Doctor Long was not made nor used in the pursuit of wealth. No sordid stain seared spotless science in his search. As he frequently remarked when efforts were being made to have Congress reward peculiarly the discoverer of anesthesia, this uncrowned monarch of medicine, this conqueror of pain, desired to be considered only as a benefactor to man.

It can be truly said that the scope of Long's beneficence is wider than that of any benefactor in the realm of scientific and medical discovery who has appeared in the history of medical science since the discovery of America. Georgia is the State of benevolence. Unlike other States on the Atlantic coast, the settlement of Georgia upon Yamacraw Bluff by Oglethorpe was solely and purely an act of benevolence. The settlers were taken from the debtor's jails, in which they hopelessly languished, and given a new chance in life, without any hope on the part of the proprietors of the colony of pecuniary reward or emolument therefor. How fitting, then, it is that from the State thus founded should have come he who freely gave the discovery for the alleviation of pain in childbirth and surgery, which was probably the greatest desideratum in that era of medical science and the value of which was destined to last forever. If Harvey is entitled to immortal fame because he discovered the circulation of the blood, if Galileo and Jenner merit immortality, no less will suffering humanity throughout the world, as long as pain and suffering endure, acclaim the name of him who enabled the physician to say in imitation of the Great Physician, and yet without blasphemy, "He giveth His beloved sleep."

For another reason, too, it is well that Georgia should have selected Long to stand with the great commoner, Alexander H. Stephens, as the most distinguished of her sons. His personal character and his private life were such as to add to instead of detract from his great discovery. He stands here as a model of the clean, cultured, courtly, Christian, Chesterfield—the real southern gentleman. Ofttimes in history private vices blurred great genius. Nelson had his Lady Hamilton; Byron, Burns, and Shelley were subject to human frailties that their most ardent admirers can but regret. Even Alexander the Great was intemperate, and Solomon, after building the temple of Almighty God, reared altars of idolatry to please his numerous wives. But Long, the great discoverer, who gave the world the antidote for pain, rests not beneath a single shadow which can affect the perfect purity of his life as an ideal citizen, brother, husband, friend, or counselor. His life was pure and gentle, and in him the elements did so mix that all the world could say he was a man. He sprang from good old Revolutionary stock. Both his maternal and paternal grandfathers saw service during the entire Revolution of 1776 to 1781. He belonged to that great host—in peace indispensable, in war invincible—upon whose perpetuation in their pristine purity hangs the destiny of this Union and the preservation of human liberty.

Doctor Long sprang from that great class who owned their homes, as did his forebears before him, and if one can love his country at all, the fires of patriotism must burn far more brightly in the heart of him who has an ownership and a proprietary interest of that portion of his country he loves as his home. And as he stands here through future generations he will illustrate the value of good, pure breeding, independent thought, but gentle bearing, spotless life, and devotion to humanity, that will make an impression no less uplifting and helpful to the thoughtful visitor than the thoughts evoked by any of the great men centered here.

The medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, of which Doctor Long was a graduate, years ago placed in everdurable bronze a memorial in her classic halls to the great discovery which the youthful Georgian made in little more than three years after his graduation.

As chairman of the board of trustees of the University of Georgia, I have been directed to bespeak also in behalf of that dear mother—his alma mater—the feelings of pride and gratification that this day warms her mother's heart. The heart of a mother is not sordid seeking amassment of wealth, nor distracted by the bickerings of politics, nor swollen with mere desire for victory on land or sea or in the air. The soul of a mother yearns for gentler and more unselfish virtues. To her the drying of a single tear has more of honest fame than shedding seas of gore. In her inspiration for service, the soothing of the pangs of pain gives more worthy honor than any crown of bays are placed upon a victor's brow, and so as this mortal effigy of her son is well and fitly placed among the immortals of his dear and native land, the voice of alma mater says, it is well. It is well the sculptor's skill that gives the liveliness of life and likeness through which he ever shall live depicts him in his youth. In him youth triumphed, for at scarcely 27 he substituted for the pangs of pain, peaceful rest, for the anguish of agony, anesthesia. It is well, for science and truth live in eternal youth which neither time can wither nor death decay. The stone which is the representative of his physical body was taken from the precious bosom of his mother Georgia. And alma mater says, it is well. As this stone came close from her heart, so it typifies the purity of his life, the unselfishness of his aspirations and the genuineness of his right as the real discoverer.

It is well, too, says alma mater, that the grand, everlasting sentinels of Georgia's marble mountains should in loving complaisance gladly yield this memorial to old Georgia's son. The everlasting foundations on which they stand will well depict the strong and immutable hold which the character and services of Crawford W. Long will ever have in the minds and hearts of his fellow citizens. In her earliest infancy our Imperial Commonwealth, Georgia, inscribed upon her seal of State her thought and ideals as to the essentials of good government in the three words, "Wisdom, justice, and moderation." The University of Georgia, alma mater of Crawford W. Long, after having herself rejoiced for more than fourscore years in the magnitude of the blessing given the whole world by her worthy son, acclaims this event as an instance of justice long delayed but at length secure.

In this, our Nation's holiest shrine, pious hands and loving hearts from each sovereign State offer the fragrant sacrifice of strong yet sweet devotion. The mother instinct of each Commonwealth has chosen from her sons the chiefest in service and the kings in the kingdom of minds. Here place we Long. And sculpture in our behalf gives bond in stone to guard him and immortalize the trust. The State which first gave the world the hymn book, the Sunday school, the orphan's home, the State university, the woman's college, the cotton gin, the sewing machine, the State whose marble shines in the sunlight of many sections of this Union as the buttresses of art, as the walls of justice and of legislation, adds to this galaxy of the great him whose discovery blesses without distinction all countries and climes, all races, and all religions.

A benefactor of humanity whose beneficence no mountains or rivers or seas or natural boundary lines can exclude, a benefactor whose discovery in 1842 will be greater in 3842 and much multiplied in 10042. 'Tis well. The plaudits we now feebly utter, the grand pipe organ of the distant centuries will peal forth in crescendo notes of praise and these will be reechoed in the paeans of paradise in memory of Long.

In the spirit of that justice which her seal proclaims, old Georgia knows that had no memorial been erected by human hands, in the just verdict of the future Crawford W. Long would have lived in memory. But as error ceases to be dangerous when truth is free to combat it, the memorial we place to-day bears witness to the victory of truth over error and misinformation. And alma mater says 'tis well. The hoarse notes of the massive waves that roll upon our seagirt coast chime with the silvery tinkle of our mountain brooks in cadence with the mother's voice, it is well. And the gentle zephyrs of his native hills pause for an instant as they pass his resting place and whisper in his sleeping ears, Your mother loves you.

Here travelers from every land will look upon a friend of man. They will see in him exemplified for all time that spirit of self-sacrificing and unselfish devotion which, as it most largely contributes to the most urgent needs of all the world, is indeed the highest worship of Almighty God.

For myself, may I be permitted to add—

No radiant pearl which crested fortune wears,
No sparkling gem which hangs from beauty's ear,
Nor the bright stars that the blue arch of night adorn
Nor rising suns which gild the vernal morn
Shines with such luster "as the smile which lights the face
Of grateful mother who's just given to her race,
In painless peace, a boy well worth her tender care
Or a bright girl of mind and heart and beauty rare.
Her frail body for fierce conflict had been staged
With pangs of hell, and dread forebodings all her thoughts engaged.
Tortured in body, racked in mind, ether ends the contest cruel
And wife and mother wakes, to kiss and clasp the prize—her jewel.
And yet, but for Long, the conqueror of pain
Death had prevailed, and turned to dust these twain.
Had marked the fond features with emblem of despair
And snatched from helpless babe its vital air.
The heedless multitudes to wealth or pomp may bow,
May idolize success, achieved no matter how;
Swept by propaganda, current millions meekly yield,
Acclaim some new-found hero, or glorify the tented field.
Invention may our joys or comforts season;
Legislation may our burdens lessen,
The law by statutes may new crimes define,
And education mold and fire the common mind.
But our suffering race to Long's discovery owes Relief afforded by no human laws.

Doctor BOLAND. It was the intention to have this statue presented to the United States of America by Hon. Clifford Walker, the Governor of Georgia; but unfortunately he is unable to be here. He has sent us a most acceptable substitute in the person of Hon. George M. Napier, attorney general of the State of Georgia, who will present the statue for the State of Georgia.

ADDRESS OF HON. GEORGE M. NAPIER, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE STATE OF GEORGIA

Mr. Chairman, daughters of Doctor Long, my fellow countrymen: Though sensible of the disappointment that Governor Walker, of Georgia, is prevented from attending in person, it is my privilege to speak for him and for my State in these exercises.

In this national Pantheon we are presenting the statue of the discoverer of the supreme earthly benefaction to suffering humanity. This is a Valhalla of memorials and immortals, including the statues and effigies of warriors, statesmen, orators, inventors, humanitarians, but none such as this, which will perpetuate the ineffable glory of world-wide mercy.

Crawford W. Long, the physician, mindful of the terrible agony of sufferers in surgical operations, discovered an anesthetic and an analgesic, that agency which at once renders the patient unconscious of being handled and completely insensible of pain. If we reflect how many millions of people had suffered the tortures of the damned in treatment for wounds and afflictions in all the years prior to this discovery, and how many have had the terrors of surgery banished during the four and eighty years since Doctor Long accomplished his first anesthetized operation, and if we give rein to our prevision and look down the vistas of coming years at the untold millions more who will escape pain and will live through major operations, made possible only through the use of an anesthetic, we may the better comprehend his illimitable boon to the human race.

If service to humanity be a ground of distinction, then the name of this modest, kind-hearted surgeon, like the name of Abou ben Adhem of old, leads all the rest.

This will be a memorial of unfading perpetuation of the country doctor, that professional who for ages, in thousands of modest communities, has rendered his most unselfish service, content with small rewards, dispensing charity, bearing comfort, inspiring hope, affording relief, and restoring health. None has been like him in serving his day and generation—an exemplar of that Great Physician who on the Judean hills went about doing good.

The State of Georgia is pleased to accept this beautifully carved memorial, whose glory is undimmed by the chaplets on the brow of any figure in this hall of imperishable fame, and it is proud and happy to be the mother of the discoverer of ether anesthesia; her great son, who by his fame distinguished his native State and the Nation, to whom it was given to render this immortal service to his fellow man. So, sir, I am pleased to submit to you, or the Government which you serve as Senator from Georgia, this statue of him who became greatest by doing service and honor, Crawford W. Long. [Great applause.]

Doctor BOLAND. The statue will be accepted for the National Government by a most able and beloved Georgian, to whom we are under many obligations for his activities in perfecting the plans for this unveiling, Senator WILLIAM J. HARRIS, of Georgia. [Applause.]

ACCEPTANCE FOR THE UNITED STATES BY SENATOR WILLIAM J. HARRIS, OF GEORGIA

Mr. Chairman and daughters of Doctor Long, ladies and gentlemen, and fellow Georgians, if anything could intensify the pleasure and pride that I feel to-day in accepting for our Government the statue of a citizen of Georgia, Dr. Crawford W. Long, who unquestionably was the first to use anesthetics in surgical operations, it is the fact that my father was a Georgia doctor and who practiced his profession for 50 years.

Georgia is not the only State that has honored a physician. The statue of Doctor Gorrie, who discovered the process for the manufacture of artificial ice, was placed in Statuary Hall by our sister State, Florida. I am sure that all Georgians are proud of the fact that Gen. Joseph Wheeler and Dr. J. L. M. Curry, whose statues were placed here by the State of Alabama, and Sequoyah, the Cherokee Indian educator, whose statue was erected here by the State of Oklahoma, were all born in Georgia.

The physicians of the world have contributed to human progress in a measure unexcelled by any other profession. The records, which show that a half century ago the average age at death of people in the United States was about 42 years, and that a year ago it had advanced to about 54, prove beyond all question that the average duration of human life in civilized countries has been extended by 12 years. This does not mean that the life span, which the Bible states is three score years and ten, has been changed, for there are to-day no more people per thousand living beyond 70 than there were 50 years ago. It does mean that there are far more of the children born that reach maturity and live until past middle age, making an average of 12 years added to human life in civilized countries. The credit for most of this added life must, in good reason, be accorded the physicians, who care for the health of the people.

The fundamental aims of the physician are the prolongation of life and the alleviation of human suffering. The use of an anesthetic for surgical operations promoted both these aims in large measure, and its now general use is responsible for a large part of the 12 years added recently to the average human life. This being true, it follows that the discovery of ether was one of the greatest human services ever rendered to mankind, and this by a young country doctor of Georgia. We had well be proud of that eminent fact. Men with great minds have searched down the ages for the agency that would banish suffering during surgical operation.

I am especially proud to accept in the name of the United States Government the statue to a Georgian whose humanitarianism has revolutionized the practice of surgery and been of untold benefit to mankind.

One who is intimate with Crawford Williamson Long and his family has made the following statement about his life:

"A life so exemplary and full of high ideals as was that of Crawford W. Long was largely the result of heredity and environment.

"The Longs of Ulster, Ireland, were Scotch-Irish Presbyterians and men of prominence. For political reasons they were dispossessed of their lands upon which Samuel Long migrated to America and settled in Carlisle, Pa. He fought through the Revolutionary War and soon after its close came to Georgia as the head of a Presbyterian colony.

"James Long, his son, and the father of Crawford Long, was born in Pennsylvania and received his early education in that State. He was a leader in all public enterprises and by inheritance and sound business judgment became the wealthiest man in his district.

"Although a merchant and planter he was so thoroughly versed in jurisprudence that his intimate friend, William H. Crawford, who was minister to France and once a candidate for President of the United States, and for whom his son Crawford was named, often consulted him upon legal technicalities. James Long held many offices of trust such as clerk of the superior court, member of the legislature, State senate, etc. Of a studious nature and the possessor of a fine library, he was deeply interested in the education of the masses. He endowed the school in his little town and selected the teachers.

"His four children were sent to Athens to be educated; the sons to the University of Georgia, the daughters to a select boarding school.

"Crawford Long's mother was Elizabeth Ware, of Virginia, the daughter of a large slave owner. One member of her family located in Augusta—Nicholas Ware, who became a United States Senator. The largest county in the State—Ware—was named for him.

"Crawford Long was admitted by special permission at the age of 14 to Franklin College, now University of Georgia, graduating with second honor and A. M. degree, 1835. He attended the medical department of the University of Kentucky and frequently visited the home of Henry Clay, who treated the young Georgian with special consideration, as he was aware that his father was his ardent supporter. In 1839 he graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, going immediately to a New York hospital to perfect himself in surgery, where he remained until August, 1841, when he located temporarily at Jefferson, Ga., after having received the best literary and medical training this country afforded. March 30, 1842, he performed his first surgical operation on a patient anesthetized by the inhalation of sulphuric ether. A few years later he moved to Athens and died in the discharge of his duty at the bedside of a patient, June 16, 1878."

Doctor BOLAND. It is next my privilege to present to you a surgeon of not only national but international reputation—the wonderful instructor, the master surgeon and scientific investigator, Dr. Hugh H. Young, of Johns Hopkins Hospital. [Applause.]

ADDRESS OF DR. HUGH H. YOUNG

Mr. Chairman, daughters of Doctor Long, ladies and gentlemen, it is a great privilege to speak for the medical profession of America at the unveiling of the statue of one who was the first to conceive and carry out the greatest boon to suffering humanity.

For in comparison with surgical anesthesia all other contributions to medical science are trivial.

Before anesthesia surgery was a horror. Surgical operations were dreadful ordeals—a hell to the patients, a purgatory to the surgeons. The frightful shrieks from the hospital operating rooms filled those waiting their turn in the wards with terror.

The awful experiences of operative surgery and the attendant high mortality caused the best minds in medicine to avoid operations. Indeed, for centuries the major operations in Europe were left to itinerant butchers, and in England the barber surgeons did the work while the medical profession stood by and vainly tried to assuage the anguish of the patient.

In a letter to the famous surgeon, Sir James Y. Simpson, a patient who had recently lost a leg by amputation thus described his tortures: "The blank whirlwind of emotion, the horror of great despair, and the sense of desertion by God and man, bordering close upon despair, which swept through my mind and overwhelmed my heart I can never forget. I watched all that the surgeon did with a fascinated intensity. I still recall with unwelcome vividness the spreading out of the instruments, the twisting of the tourniquet, the first incision, the fingering of the sawed bone, the sponge pressed on the flap, the tying of blood vessels, the stitching of the skin, and the bloody, dismembered limb lying on the floor. Their memory still haunts me."

But the sufferings of high-minded, sensitive doctors in the midst of this welter of blood and misery were almost as great as those of the poor patients. Many of the most brilliant actions of Aesculapius have told how they have deserted surgery and even quit their cherished profession rather than continue in such heart-rending work.

"How often," says Dr. Valentine Mott (one of America's greatest surgical pioneers), "when operating in some deep, dark wound, along the course of some great vein, with thin walls, alternately distended and flaccid with the vital current—how often have I dreaded that some unfortunate struggle of the patient would deplete the knife a little from its proper course, and that I, who fain would be the deliverer, should involuntarily become the executioner, seeing my patient perish in my hands by the most appalling form of death! Had he been insensible I should have felt no alarm."

The celebrated John Bell in describing the operation for stone says:

"The posture in which the patient is bound is horrible, but essential to the performing of an operation where the slipping of one instrument or the misgiving of one stroke of the knife makes the difference of safety or death. He must be made to grasp his feet with his hands, and secured in that posture by cords encircling the wrists and ankles, and thus bended into a curve, is brought so near to the edge of the table that he is almost suspended in air.

"Three medical assistants should hold him, one on each side; the third assistant should support his head and shoulders and keep him forward according to the operator's directions. A friend should stand by to speak to him, to encourage and to give him occasionally a little wine and water; and everything on the table of instruments should be fairly arranged, and every attendant steady, silent, and observing. When the surgeon, advancing to the table thus arranged, warms the gorget while he grasps the knife and advances to make the lightning cuts which are to complete the operation."

This was the routine in the homes of the rich, where attention de luxe was possible. What was done in the homes of the poor and most of all the operating shambles of the battle field? Amputations were often made with a swift blow of the ax or meat cleaver, followed by a red-hot iron to stanch the flow of blood, as they dared not use ligatures to bind the bleeding arteries for fear of septic poisoning. But what was the medical profession about? Were there no efforts made to conquer pain and to improve surgical technique?

Since the beginning of medical history our records show that the never despairing hope of physicians was to conquer pain and thus be allowed to carry out surgical procedures with tranquil thoroughness rather than in a mad dash against pain and death.

"Sacred, profane, and mythological literature abound in incident, fact, and fancy showing that from earliest times man has sought to assuage pain by some means of dulling consciousness. In these attempts many methods and divers agents have been employed. The inhalation of fumes from various substances, weird incantations, the external and internal application of drugs and many strange concoctions, pressure upon important nerves and blood vessels, the laying on of hands, or animal magnetism, mesmerism, etc., have played their part in the evolution of anesthesia." (Anesthesia, by J. T. Gwathey.)

Mandragora was used by both Greeks and Romans for hundreds of years to produce sleep, and Asiatics employed hashish to dull consciousness of pain. Later opium and hemlock were used.

It was not until the early chemical discoveries of hydrogen, nitrogen, oxygen, and nitrous oxide in the latter part of the eighteenth century that the way was found for a scientific anesthesia. Sir Humphrey Davy said in 1800, "Since nitrous oxide is capable of destroying pain it may be used in surgical operation," and 25 years later Hickman anesthetized rabbits with nitrous oxide and carried out many operations successfully upon them without a struggle. But these demonstrations went unheeded—the surgical theater continued to be a torture chamber!

But nitrous oxide and sulphuric ether, neglected by the medical profession, were seized upon by populace who found in them a pleasant means of becoming exhilarated. Itinerant lecturers on the marvels of chemistry roamed over the country and popularized their meetings by giving the young people ether to breathe while the audiences roared with laughter over their unconscious antics on the stage.

The knowledge of and interest in these drugs reached even to the distant rural hamlets. In one of these, Jefferson, Jackson County, Ga., many miles from a railroad, Crawford W. Long was plying his profession of medicine. Fresh from the University of Pennsylvania, he knew of the exhilarating properties of these drugs and frequently furnished ether to young men who met at his office for an "ether frolic" in the winter of 1841-42. But let him tell his story:

"They were so much pleased with its effects that they afterwards frequently used it and induced others to do the same, and the practice soon became quite fashionable in the county and some of the contiguous counties.

"On numerous occasions I inhaled ether for its exhilarating properties and would frequently, at some short time subsequent to its inhalation, discover bruised or painful spots on my person which I had no recollection of causing and which I felt satisfied were received while under the influence of ether. I noticed my friends while etherized received falls and blows which I believed were sufficient to produce pain on a person not in a state of anesthesia, and on questioning them they uniformly assured me that they did not feel the least pain from these accidents. Observing these facts, I was led to believe that anesthesia was produced by the inhalation of ether, and that its use would be applicable in surgical operations.

"The first patient to whom I administered ether in a surgical operation was Mr. James M. Venable, who then resided within two miles of Jefferson, and at present lives in Cobb County, Ga. Mr. Venable consulted me on several occasions in regard to the propriety of removing two small tumors situate on the back part of his neck but would postpone from time to time having the operation performed, from dread of pain. At length I mentioned to him the fact of my receiving bruises while under the influence of the vapor of ether without suffering, and as I knew him to be fond of and accustomed to inhale ether, I suggested to him the probability that the operations might be performed without pain, and proposed operating on him while under its influence. He consented to have one tumor removed, and the operation was performed the same evening. The ether was given to Mr. Venable on a towel, and when fully under its influence I extirpated the tumor.

"It was encysted and about half an inch in diameter. The patient continued to inhale ether during the time of the operation, and when informed it was over, seemed incredulous until the tumor was shown him.

"He gave no evidence of suffering during the operation, and assured me, after it was over, that he did not experience the least degree of pain from its performance. This operation was performed on the 30th of March, 1842."

Here, then, was the first successful attempt to render a patient insensible to pain during a surgical operation! The beginning of a new era of incalculable relief of human suffering—an era which was to revolutionize surgery and make it a million times more efficient in alleviating human ills.

Long did not rush into print, but like a painstaking, modest scientist, quietly continued his work, removing another tumor on the same patient a few weeks later, and then amputating a toe under complete ether anesthesia in July.

After that, his meager practice only furnished him a few surgical cases each year which he continued to operate upon under ether, while he bided his time, waiting for a major operation before publishing his claims to a discovery which he well realized would revolutionize surgery and startle the world. Long thus succinctly gives his motives:

"I was anxious, before making my publication, to try etherization in a sufficient number of cases to fully satisfy my mind that anesthesia was produced by the ether, and was not the effect of the imagination or owing to any peculiar insusceptibility to pain in the persons experimented on.

"At the time I was experimenting with ether there were physicians high in authority and of justly distinguished character who were the advocates of mesmerism, and recommended the induction of the mesmeric state as adequate to prevent pain in surgical operations. Notwithstanding thus sanctioned, I was an unbeliever in the science, and of the opinion that if the mesmeric state could be produced at all it was only on those of strong imaginations and weak minds, and was to be ascribed solely to the workings of the patient's imagination. Entertaining this opinion, I was the more particular in my experiments in etherization.

"Surgical operations are not of frequent occurrence in a country practice, and especially in the practice of a young physician; yet I was fortunate enough to meet with two cases in which I could satisfactorily test the anesthetic power of ether. From one of these patients I removed three tumors the same day; the inhalation of ether was used only in the second operation, and was effectual in preventing pain, while the patient suffered severely from the extirpation of the other tumors. In the other case I amputated two fingers of a negro boy; the boy was etherized during one amputation and not during the other; he suffered from one operation and was insensible during the other.

"After fully satisfying myself of the power of ether to produce anesthesia, I was desirous of administering it in a severer surgical operation than any I had performed. In my practice, prior to the published account of the use of ether as an anesthetic, I had no opportunity of experimenting with it in a capital operation, my cases being confined, with one exception, to the extirpation of small tumors and the amputation of fingers and toes.

"While cautiously experimenting with ether, as cases occurred, with a view of fully testing its anesthetic powers and its applicability to severe as well as minor surgical operations, others more favorably situated engaged in similar experiments, and consequently the publication of etherization did not 'bide my time.'

"I know that I deferred the publication too long to receive any honor from the priority of discovery, but having by the persuasion of my friends presented my claim before the profession, I prefer that its correctness be fully investigated before the Medical Society. Should the society say that the claim, though well founded, is forfeited by not being presented earlier, I will cheerfully respond, so mote it be.

"Not wishing to intrude upon the time of the society, I have made this short compendium of all the material points stated in my article in the journal, and if the society wishes any further information on the subject I will cheerfully comply with their wishes."

But are Long's documents genuine, complete, and convincing? I can personally testify that they are. In 1896, I chanced to meet Mrs. Fanny Long Taylor, who amazed me by saying that her father was the discoverer of surgical anesthesia. I had heard only of Morton in whose honor as the "discoverer of anesthesia" a great celebration was in preparation in Boston. I was thrilled when she said she could put Doctor Long's documentary proofs in my hands, and when a few days later I hurried through his time-stained papers, case-histories, account books, affidavits from patients, attendants, physicians in his town and elsewhere in Georgia—all of which furnished overwhelming proof of the originality of his discovery and his successful employment of ether to produce complete anesthesia in numerous operations, I asked permission to present again his claims in greater detail.

On looking into the literature I found that the great Dr. Marion Sims had ardently asserted that Long undoubtedly had done the first operation under ether anesthesia—ante-dating the work of Morton at the Massachusetts General by four years. Unfortunately Sims' paper was distorted by a serious misstatement—he gave the credit for the idea of using ether to a Doctor Wilhite, one of Long's medical students, from whom Sims learned of Long's work. Wilhite's story was disproved by a letter from Wilhite which I found among the Long papers, in which he, Wilhite, admitted his "mistake" in making this claim.

I found also that Morton's son had vigorously assailed Long's methods, asserting that complete anesthesia was not produced; that the ether was used as at the "ether frolics"; that the patient "administered ether to himself and remained conscious all the time."

By happy fortune I found one of Doctor Long's assistants still alive, and he (Dr. J. F. Groves) described how "Doctor Long poured ether on a towel and held it to the patient's nose and mouth . . . and determined when the patient was sufficiently etherized to begin operation by pinching him, and then gave me the towel, and I kept up the influence by holding it still to the patient's nose. The patient was entirely unconscious." (Given in detail in Long, the Discoverer of Anesthesia—a presentation of his original documents by Hugh H. Young, the Johns Hopkins Hospital Bulletin, August, 1898.) The Wilhite story of priority of idea, advanced by Sims, I was able to disprove by a letter from Wilhite himself, which admitted his "mistake."

Lack of time forbids my describing many interesting phases of the contest for the honor of this colossal discovery. Jackson and Morton, who obtained a patent for their "discovery" (the nature of the anesthetic, which they called "letheon," being kept secret) on the basis of Jackson's giving Morton the idea, and Morton using it on the first cases (dental), subsequently disagreed, and Doctor Jackson hearing of Long's claims, visited him in Georgia to investigate them and then generously wrote as follows:

BOSTON, Thursday, April 11, 1861.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE BOSTON MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL.

MESSENGERS. EDITORS: At the request of the Hon. Mr. Dawson, United States Senator from Georgia, on March 8, 1854, I called upon Dr. C. W. Long, of Athens, Ga. From the documents shown me by Doctor Long it appears that he employed sulphuric ether as an anesthetic agent:

First, March 30, 1842, when he extirpated a small glandular tumor from the neck of James M. Venable, a boy in Jefferson, Ga., now dead.

Second, July 3, 1842, in the amputation of the toe of a negro boy belonging to Mrs. Hemphill, of Jackson, Ga.

Third, September 9, 1843, in extirpation of a tumor from the head of Mary Vincent, of Jackson, Ga.

Fourth, January 8, 1845, in the amputation of a finger of a negro boy belonging to Ralph Bailey, of Jackson, Ga.

Copies of the letters and depositions proving these operations with ether were all shown me by Doctor Long.

I then called on Profs. Joseph and John Le Conte, then of the University of Georgia, at Athens, and inquired if they knew Doctor Long and what his character was for truth and veracity. They both assured me that they knew him well and that no one who knew him in that town would doubt his word, and that he was an honorable man in all respects.

Subsequently, on revisiting Athens, Doctor Long showed me his folio journal, or account book, in which stand the following entries:

James Venable:
March 30, 1842, ether and excising tumor	$2. 00
May 13, sul. ether	. 25
June 6, excising tumor	2. 00

On the upper half of the same page several charges for ether sold to the teacher of the Jefferson Academy are recorded, which ether Doctor Long told me was used by the teacher in exhibiting its exhilarating effects, and he said the boys used it for the same purpose in the academy. I observed that all these records bore the appearance of old and original entries in the book.

I have waited, expecting Doctor Long to publish his statements and evidence in full, and therefore have not before published what I learned from him. He is a very modest, retiring man, and not disposed to bring his claims before any but a medical or scientific tribunal.

Had he written to me in season I would have presented his claim to the Academy of Sciences of France, but he allowed his case to go by default, and the academy knew no more of his claims to the practical use of ether in surgical operations than I did.

CHARLES T. JACKSON, M. D.

Boston, April 3, 1861.

Long's claims were therefore shown to rest on solid evidence. He had produced complete anesthesia by ether which he personally administered, had operated painlessly, and on several cases four years before anyone else. He had not kept his anesthetic secret, but had told fellow physicians of his town and State of his work. By strange coincidence Morton did not publish his epoch-making cases, but it remained for one who had not even done the operations, Dr. H. J. Bigelow, to become his mouthpiece and advocate in the sad spectacle of litigation and controversy between the rival New England claimants for a bonus from Congress for the discovery of anesthesia. In this Doctor Long took no part, but a presentation of his documents by Senator Dawson, of Georgia, promptly killed the bill to give Morton $100,000.

On March 30, 1912, on the seventieth anniversary of his first operation, a great celebration was staged at his alma mater—the University of Pennsylvania—in honor of Long's discovery of anesthesia.

That the general usage of ether in surgery came after the surgeons of the Massachusetts General Hospital had operated upon cases anesthetized by Morton no one will gainsay. But in this epoch-making discovery and the general adoption of anesthesia there is surely "glory enough for all."

I have already consumed so much time that little can be told of the immense benefit which promptly accrued to surgery and to humanity by the discovery of anesthesia.

Surgery was unshackled, physicians returned to the operating table, the shrieks of the torture chamber ceased, and the operating amphitheater became a place of quiet scientific endeavor to master the ravages of disease with the humane use of the knife. Conditions, heretofore hopeless, were brought under the sway of surgery; surgeons rapidly acquired a daring, a dexterity, and exquisite skill that has resulted in the most amazing progress witnessed in any art.

Before anesthesia, only 34 cases a year were operated on at the Massachusetts General. In five years the number had tripled, and in 50 years the increase was a hundredfold.

In the surgical textbooks before 1842 one finds described only minor procedures and emergency operations. Within 10 years the changes wrought were immense; splendid new conquests over disease by surgery were reported. The advance was rapid, but not until Pasteur's great work on spontaneous generation (1862) and diseases of silkworms in 1865 and Lister's announcement of his discovery of surgical antiseptics in 1867 was the capstone placed upon Long's work of 15 years before. Surgery was delivered from the horrors of pain and infection, and, like an animal freed from a black dungeon of despair, bounded forth into the pure light of science.

Disease, now explained by the germ theory, rapidly fell before one masterful research after another, while surgeons boldly went forth to conquer the hidden terrors of the abdomen, the chest, the brain, and every corner of the human organism was finally brought under the searching rays of scientific medicine.

Without the gift of anesthesia where would we be to-day? Accustomed as we are to behold the wonderful accomplishments of modern medicine and surgery with complacency, what a tumult would ensue were we to revert again to the days of the great discoverer whose memory we celebrate to-day in the unveiling of this splendid replica of Crawford Williamson Long.

Doctor BOLAND. The great State of Pennsylvania could well claim a part in the production of Doctor Long as well as the State of Georgia, in as much as Doctor Long graduated in medicine from the splendid medical department of that venerable institution in 1839.

In the regretted absence of Senator PEPPER, his place will be taken by the vice provost of the University of Pennsylvania, Dr. George William McClellan. [Applause.]

ADDRESS OF DR. GEORGE W. MCCLELLAN

Mr. President, daughters of Doctor Long, ladies, and gentlemen, in the unavoidable absence of Senator PEPPER, our distinguished alumnus, it is my pleasure to be the spokesman of the University of Pennsylvania in joining in this tribute to our great alumnus.

Those of us who are fairly acquainted with the problems in the life of the university of to-day must needs for our encouragement and inspiration pause occasionally and look across the years into the past. The university which I represent stretches back 186 years into the history of our country and is inseparably connected with its development.

There are no scales of measurement by which one may calculate what the alumni of any college or university, across the space of years, has contributed toward the relief of human suffering and the prolongation of human life. We are very proud that we can join with the University of Georgia in claiming Doctor Long as one of our sons. We are proud of the fact that he went out from our medical school, and as a practicing physician made this great discovery for the relief of human suffering.

It gives me pleasure, in behalf of our provost, Doctor Penniman, to present these flowers to the ladies of Doctor Long's family in recognition of their faithful, loyal devotion to his memory, and to the putting of the truth before mankind. [Applause.]

On behalf of our alumni in the city of Washington I wish to present this wreath in tribute to the memory of our distinguished alumnus, who has given an illustration to all Pennsylvania men of an ideal spirit. [Applause.]

Doctor BOLAND. Crawford Long was one of the charter members of the Medical Association of Georgia, which was organized in 1849, at which time he presented his first paper on this subject before its body.

One of the very young associates of Doctor Long—at this time it is hard to believe that he was an associate, when we look at him—in the latter days of the life of Doctor Long was a young physician who was destined to become a leader in the profession in later years. This man I have the honor to introduce to you now, one who has done much to perpetuate the fame of Doctor Long, Dr. L. G. Hardman, speaking for the Medical Association of Georgia.

RESPONSE BY DR. L. G. HARDMAN FOR THE MEDICAL ASSOCIATION OF GEORGIA

Mr. Chairman, Doctor Long's daughters, Senators, Congressmen, ladies, and gentlemen, before I undertake to present my short paper to you I wish to call to your attention this fact, that our distinguished physician and surgeon from Johns Hopkins has given the credit to a foreigner, if I may so term it, to Sir Joseph Lister, as the discoverer of antiseptic surgery. I propose to present to you in my paper another Georgian who did antiseptic surgery and taught it prior to 1867—in the sixties—during the war between the States.

The honor and privilege has been granted me to represent the Medical Association of Georgia on this occasion. Indeed, it is a great joy and gratification to be permitted to be present, bringing with me the hearts and souls of all Georgians, who feel so grateful for the discovery made by one of her sons, Dr. Crawford W. Long, who has contributed so much to the world.

Dr. Crawford W. Long was a charter member of the Medical Association of Georgia, which was organized March 20, 1849. Other members of the association who stand out as pioneers in medical science are Dr. L. D. Ford, of Augusta, the first president of this association and who was first to advocate quinine for the cure of malaria, and Dr. L. A. Dugas, of Augusta, the discoverer of mesmeric anesthesia and gave to the world antiseptic surgery; he was also first to advocate laparotomy for gunshot wounds in his famous paper read before the International Medical Congress in Philadelphia in 1876. The works of these still live to bless humanity.

The great physician and Georgian, Dr. Crawford W. Long, was in touch with the burdens and responsibilities of the doctors of this organization, and with his humble, gentle, and sweet disposition was often enabled by his advice and wise counsel to lift the weight of the burden from his fellow doctor in many ways as well as in the practice of his profession. I can not express to you the great esteem and appreciation in which he was held by his coworkers in his noble profession. This organization is here in spirit, in love, and joy to witness the high honor that is now being conferred upon him, one of its most distinguished members. His highest ambition was to serve humanity. Several years elapsed before the world began to know of his discovery. However, his friends and neighbor doctors were enthusiastic over his discovery and works. While that is true, the administration of sulphuric ether and his teachings were contributing untold relief to the world. But to-day God smiles upon this gathering as we lift the veil from his statue. He was a follower of the lowly Nazarene who came into the world to destroy sin and relieve pain. The climax in his work was reached when he discovered sulphuric ether as an anesthetic. I wish the members of this association who have crossed the great beyond could have lived to witness the erection of this statue to the memory of Doctor Long, especially Dr. Howard Williams, who gave an expression in a paper read before the Medical Association of Georgia on its fiftieth anniversary, from which I quote:

"Of these, one truly great, one name sublime,
Will ring with praise, so long as art and time
Shall last—and men grow ill—Crawford W. Long.
May his fair name resound in prose and song
While ether robs the surgeon's knife
Of its sharp edge, which wounds in saving life;
Unrivalled merit his to ether's fame,
Yet this renown others unjustly claim.
Be ours the task, with credit to unroll
His honor just one fame's eternal scroll;
Nor let this day the flaming sun go down
Until a fund begins with which to crown
His grand success in marble white or brass
Of statue great, so all may see who pass,
And the unnumbered many thousands can
With ringing voice exclaim, behold the man Whom God the ethereal art hath showed Once used when Eve on Adam was bestowed."

The claimants, Dr. Charles T. Jackson, W. T. G. Morton, and Wells, deserve credit for their research and their use of anesthesia and we would be glad if they, too, could be placed here in company with Crawford W. Long. Their spirits no doubt mingle in company in the world beyond, and converse in an invisible way in this Statuary Hall.

We have in the United States 7,370 hospitals with a capacity of 813,926 beds, and to indicate to some degree the contribution he has made to humanity, I have attempted to secure from various institutions, namely, the University of Pennsylvania, College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York, Johns Hopkins Hospital, the National Government in Washington, and the American Medical Association, the number of anesthetics that are given daily, not only in this country but in the world, but we find no records. Johns Hopkins reports 4,235 in a year; the Hospital Library and Service Bureau estimates 3,000,000 in the United States yearly, and with this estimate I have reached the conclusion that out of the population of 113,493,720 in the United States, 2.6 per cent are anesthetized yearly; on the same basis or percentage, 42,448,000 are anesthetized yearly in the world. This will, to some extent, indicate the great service and relief to human suffering. Not only that, but it has made possible the radical cure by the surgeon's procedure which heretofore they were unable to do. In fact, in medical science, and surgery especially, it has been made possible for the eye of the surgeon to look on the interior of the human body while the patient is under the influence of the anesthesia, and with a trained eye remove diseased and injured tissues that before were never known to the world. All repairs from accidents, injuries, and gunshot wounds in the great World War and other wars, made it possible to save life, preserve limbs, and restore health, which the world can only appreciate in the great progress in medical science.

I would not pass by without noticing those in the Statuary Hall in whose company he has been placed; to them I would say that while you have passed to your reward, yet you live and speak for each State and each section the principles for which you lived and are here to bear witness to; Abraham Lincoln, who speaks for the abolition of slavery, union of States, and freedom of man; Miss Frances E. Willard, who speaks for the conservation of the character and souls of men and the abolition of the liquor traffic, his greatest enemy; J. L. M. Curry, who was born in Georgia, stands for the abolition of ignorance, the great foe of the world; Thomas H. Benton, Daniel Webster, and John C. Calhoun, who stirred the world with their wisdom and oratory, in whose company he has been placed; Ulysses S. Grant and Kirby Smith, representing the conquerors of this great Union as warriors; and Robert E. Lee, the ideal soldier and general—the conqueror of passion and prejudice of men, and others; all stand here to impress the ages with their purity and their contributions to the world. It is in their company and in this great National Capitol we rejoice in being recognized by the world for the services rendered by Crawford W. Long, the discoverer of sulphuric ether as an anesthetic. He has come to live with you for all time, presenting to the world his discovery as a destroyer of human pain. [Applause.]

Doctor BOLAND. This occasion would not be complete unless we heard from the only woman Senator in the world, that remarkable lady whom we all love so well, one whose interest in the welfare of her people never flags, former Senator Rebecca Latimer Felton, of Georgia. [Applause.]

RESPONSE BY REBECCA LATIMER FELTON, FORMER UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM GEORGIA

Beloved daughters of Doctor Long, Senators, Congressmen, and this goodly company assembled here to do honor to Georgia, the greatest mystery of human existence is the birth of a little child. It will always rank as a miracle to the searcher after truth.

Why the Almighty Creator of heaven and of earth selected the woman to insure the care and the affection of the mother to the little one in the most critical period of its early existence has never been explained to me by Bible or by science; but the fact remains that the woman was thus selected, thus emphasized, and mother love comes next to the Divine love in the story of every human life. This relation of the mother to the unborn child is universal, for every child has had its own mother.

In the Bible story of Adam and Eve the latter was penalized for disobedience by the travail of mind and body in the pains of childbirth. In this connection it is meet and proper to-day to emphasize and eulogize the discovery of an antidote for such physical and mental suffering when the pangs of maternity were unavoidable.

From a viewpoint of over 90 years, it is my privilege and my pleasure to bring to your attention the almost universal use and the importance of Doctor Long's discovery to the child-bearing women of the world. How many women, in the previous years, found their own death struggle joined to the death struggle of the child, can never be known. Such a chronicle, or such statistics, would be impossible. Therefore, how beautiful are the feet of those that brought glad tidings and a surcease from pain, until the mother could welcome her baby to her own arms with relief from acute suffering; and there is no light on land or sea like that light from the eyes of the mother who can take her baby to her heart and feel that her baby is safe and normal, and equipped for future existence, and that she also is a monument of God's saving mercy to be its nearest and dearest friend.

This hall of fame is largely occupied by military heroes. Time would fail me to elaborate the extent of America's devotion to her war heroes; but in this presence, and before this goodly company, we come here as Georgians to pay tribute to a distinguished Georgian who led the way into the greatest discovery known to all the ages, for this surcease of pain when the child first sees the light of day.

Because you love the name and the memory of your mother, just as I love the name and memory of my mother, by this token I ask you to pay respect and honor to this farseeing inventor, or this discoverer, or this explorer, just as you please, Dr. Crawford Long, of the State of Georgia; and may I not offer this little tribute from those of Georgia, in the name of the motherhood of all America. [Applause.]

Doctor BOLAND. We are delighted to have on the program to-day a worthy representative of the modern anesthetist, who is here to pay tribute to the first anesthetist. I present Dr. William Hamilton Long, of Louisville, Ky., secretary of the Southern Association of Anesthetists.

Doctor LONG. Mr. Chairman, daughters of Doctor Long, and members of the Crawford W. Long Memorial Association, ladies and gentlemen, permit me at the outset to say that I deeply appreciate the honor of the recognition accorded the Southern Association of Anesthetists at this historic event. It is as a representative of that body that I appear before you to add our mite to the great wealth of love, of honor, of respect, of tribute, of glory, all long delayed, that here to-day are laid at the feet of this great man.

For he was truly great. The very primary essentials of true greatness, the very fundamental attributes of this rare quality are the outstanding features of Crawford Long's character—humility, modesty, unselfishness. While false claimants of the honor so rightfully his wrangled and quarreled, he remained serene and supreme. Quietly, unostentatiously he continued his work. To one with his conception of ethical standards the idea of entering such a controversy was repugnant. It was beneath the dignity of a physician; it was out of keeping with the delicate and charming code of honor and of custom that obtained among gentlemen in the South.

Crawford Long wished merely to find the truth. Probably he felt that in the full measure of time, the truth, the honor, and the credit would be properly adjusted. His primary concern was not with fame, and less, far less with rewards of gold. He wooed no such fickle goddesses, nor was deviated by their siren calls from the simple path of duty which lay before him. Straight, clear-cut, and well defined. He was busy, and with the enthusiasm of the ministry of his profession; with the satisfaction of a loved physician who is successfully alleviating suffering and relieving pain, he left his place as a pioneer in medicine, his heritage of fame to the future, to posterity. That he had emblazoned his name in the golden letters that spell suffering's surcease and pain's assuagement, he no doubt knew.

That he had placed it with that of Jenner, of McDowell, of Sims, I make no doubt he realized, but it was no part of his duty as he conceived it to sound the trumpets heralding his achievement. With beautiful modesty, he left that to a later generation. Not until others appeared claiming his honor was he prevailed upon to present his data. And how simply he rose to refute the claims of those whose moving force was greed; whose every effort was directed toward a recognition that would take the form of gold. He held himself aloof from those who would capitalize, commercialize a discovery that has been mankind's greatest boon. In all the archives of history, general, religious, or scientific, there is no incident that more beautifully reflects the true character of a great man than does Crawford Long's simple statement of his own attitude in the unsavory controversy which his unworthy rivals had instigated: "My only wish about it is to be regarded as the benefactor of my race." There is concentrated in a sentence the code of a doctor and the character of a gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, this occasion, sublime and noble in its purpose, immortal in its memory, should cause the heart of every human being on earth to overflow anew with grateful sentiment for Crawford Long.

The man whose genius transformed the revelry of irresponsible youth into a triumphant victory over a terror that was second only to death; who changed the operating theater from a shambles into a shining beacon light of hope; who made the scalpel an emblem of mercy where once it had been an implement of torture, comes to-day into his own. On an anniversary of the day his boon came to drive from surgery its agony we come, weakly and tardily, to do him that honor, to give to his memory that tribute so long overdue.

Truth travels but a sluggish steed, but truth must be served. To-day there is not a household in the civilized world that has not personal reason to revere his memory and to bless his name. No better example exists of the solemnity of the "eternal fitness of things" than is provided by thus enshrining his memory in this hall of hallowed fame. One more illustrious figure has been added to this proud galaxy of the Nation's great. None in this hall of heroes is more worthy of his place. His native State, sensitive always and responsive to her obligations, has displayed rare wisdom and ripe judgment in selecting her most worthy son to perpetuate her glory through the ages. How fitting that this likeness is hewn from native marble indigenous to his own beloved Georgia. Its ruggedness and its delicacy of texture symbolize alike his character and his sensitive and delicate refinement.

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the Southern Association of Anesthetists, I beg to extend congratulations to Georgia and to the Crawford W. Long Memorial Association. At its inception this organization pledged its support to any movement that would hasten justice and enshrine the truth. The Southern Association of Anesthetists flings from its masthead Long's likeness. We are proud to be represented here. We are proud to be a witness to this example of truth, oft crushed to earth, rising at last, supreme, defiant. "The wheels of God grind slowly, but they grind exceeding fine." Crawford Williamson Long is at last among his peers. [Applause.]

Doctor BOLAND. We have heard the surgeon and the anesthetist, and now comes one who often seems the most important in the sick room, the strong right arm of the medical profession, the trained nurse; God bless her! [Applause.] In placing her last on the program, thoroughly we believe that the last should be best. I have the honor to present Miss Virginia Gibbs, of Atlanta, Ga., speaking for the nurses.

Miss GIBBES, Mr. Chairman; daughters of Doctor Long; ladies and gentlemen, to-day I come to voice the spirit of the daughters of the Southland who wait by the bedside of pain—not only the voice of the nurses of the Southland but the voice of the great army of women who span the globe and watch while others sleep.

In the white, still operating room, in as many hospitals as there are cities in the wide world, silent prayers have gone up to the great God above us in deepest gratitude to Him for placing in the heart and mind of Dr. Crawford Long the beneficent and wonderful discovery of ether anesthesia.

Although with hated breath we nurses stand by the operating table as we watch the skilled hands of the surgeons, we know that peacefully sleeping the patient is being restored to health again without acknowledgment of pain.

In our Army hospitals during the time of the great World War, both in this country and "over there," our hearts crushed by the terror of it all, one bright light shown through the darkness, and that was that pain could be deadened by ether until the surgeons could complete their work.

We are grateful, Doctor Long, for the peace your discovery has brought to our little patients, our brave little patients, the little children who have to undergo operations so that spines may be made straight, limbs be made to walk—so that little bodies may run out with joy into God's beautiful world in the gladness of health.

It is with pride that I can say that fate directed my footsteps to the town of your birth, and there my heart was awed by the thought in our own red hills of Georgia, in a small town far removed from clinics and large hospitals, was born the one destined to bring peace to the suffering, a peace not unlike the soft peace that pervaded the very atmosphere around your homestead.

The nurses in the years to come whose feet shall pass this sacred spot will pause and with the same gratitude that we feel in our hearts to-day will say, "Forever dear will be your memory, Doctor Long, for the inestimable good ether anesthesia has done on earth and will continue to do until the coming of the Great Physician."

I bring a wreath from the Georgia Association of Graduate Nurses to Doctor Long's memory. [Applause.]

Doctor BOLAND. In addition to the wreath just presented from the nurses I would like to call attention to the other wreaths placed here, one from the city of Thomasville, Ga., the birthplace of Crawford Long, one from the University of Georgia, one from the Medical Association of Georgia, and one from the Medical Alumni Association of the University of Pennsylvania, and this one from the Georgia Pharmaceutical Association.

In addition to that I would call your attention to these two gavels, which were loaned for this occasion, which were made from a mulberry tree which stands in front of the building in which Doctor Long first used ether. We thank you for your attention.

CRAWFORD W. LONG

By J. T. Hudson, of Lincolnton, Ga.

Not thine upon the gory front
Where Mars the gage of battle wields;
Where, alas! too oft is wont
That right to might inglorious yields—
Where, in serried ranks arrayed,
Food for shot and shell and blade,
Men as puny pawns are played—
Pawn to ambition, pawn to greed;
Not this, O Georgian, be thy meed.

Nay! 'Twere not thine the gift
To soar in realms of phantasy!
Not thine the boon of song to lift
To rapturous heights of minstrelsy!
Not these—fleet symbols of decay,
Ephemeral tokens of a day,
Not these—the laurel and the bay!
Not so! For thee awaits a nobler lot
Than song unsung and then—forgot.

'Twas not ordained for thee to read
Thy name engrossed upon the page
Where others madly sought to lead!
Ambitions crash and passions rage!
Nay! For inscribed thereon
(The forehead of a skeleton)
Awaits—at last—oblivion!
A meteor's flash—such is fame—
Not this thy goal—an empty name!

Be this thy sole beatitude;
This sculptured tribute to thy worth—
This—the boon of gratitude,
The highest, noblest gift on earth—
For unborn millions yet shall sing—
Prince and peasant both shall bring—
Where'er is pain or suffering—
This grateful plaudit, "Yes; well done,
Georgia's splendid, noble son!"

EDWIN MARKHAM'S POEM "THE MAN WITH THE HOE"

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, this is the anniversary of the birth of Edwin Markham, the well-beloved poet. I therefore ask that his best-known poem, "The Man With the Hoe," be inserted in the Record.

There being no objection, the poem was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE MAN WITH THE HOE

(Written after seeing Millet's world-famous painting of a brutalized toiler)

God made man in his own image,
In the image of God made He him.—Genesis.
Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
Upon his hoe and gazes on the ground,
The emptiness of ages in his face
And on his back the burden of the world.
Who made him dead to rapture and despair,
A thing that grieves not and that never hopes,
Stolid and stunned, a brother to the ox?
Who loosened and let down this brutal jaw?
Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?
Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?
Is this the thing the Lord God made and gave
To have dominion over sea and land;
To trace the stars and search the heavens for power;
To feel the passion of Eternity?
Is this the dream He dreamed who shaped the suns
And mark their ways upon the ancient deep?
Down all the caverns of hell to their last gulf
There is no shape more terrible than this—
More tongued with censure of the world's blind greed—
More filled with signs and portents for the soul—
More packed with danger to the universe.
What gulfs between him and the seraphim!
Slave of the wheel of labor, what to him
Are Plato and the swing of Pleiades?
What the long reaches of the peaks of song,
The rift of dawn, the reddening of the rose?
Through this dread shape the suffering ages look;
Time's tragedy is in that aching stoop;
Through this dread shape humanity betrayed,
Plundered, profaned, and disinherited,
Cries protest to the powers that made the world,
A protest that is also prophecy.
O masters, lords and rulers in all lands,
Is this the handiwork you give to God,
This monstrous thing, distorted and soul quenched?
How will you ever straighten up this shape;
Touch it again with immortality;
Give back the upward looking and the light;
Rebuild in it the muscle and the dream;
Make right the immemorial infamies,
Perfidious wrongs, immedicable woes?
O masters, lords and rulers in all lands,
How will the future reckon with this man?

How answer his brute question in that hour
 When whirlwinds of rebellion shake all shores?
 How will it be with kingdoms and with kings—
 With those who shaped him to the thing he is—
 When this dumb terror shall rise to judge the world,
 After the silence of the centuries?

THE PROHIBITION LAW

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a statement by Bishop James Cannon, Jr., chairman of the commission on temperance and social service of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate on the subject of prohibition.

There being no objection, Bishop Cannon's statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

STATEMENT BY BISHOP JAMES CANNON, JR., CHAIRMAN OF COMMISSION ON TEMPERANCE AND SOCIAL SERVICE OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH, BEFORE SENATE JUDICIARY SUBCOMMITTEE HEARINGS ON PROHIBITION

I appear before the committee to-day as the representative of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the third largest Protestant denomination in the country, with a membership of over 2,600,000 with over 2,300,000 Sunday-school scholars, and about 300,000 members of young people's societies. I have been elected by the general conference as the chairman of the commission on temperance and social service of this church for the past 12 years, and at the meeting of that commission on April 1 last, was requested to represent at this hearing the position of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, as it has been indicated by resolutions unanimously adopted by 340 district conferences, by 54 annual conferences, by the college of bishops, and by the general conference itself. (The influence of Methodism has been consistently and persistently and vigorously thrown against the liquor traffic ever since the establishment of the United Methodist Society by John Wesley nearly 200 years ago, and it is a pleasant duty to place on record at this hearing the attitude of our branch of Methodism on the questions now under consideration by this committee.)

"TO PROMOTE THE GENERAL WELFARE"

The eighteenth, commonly called the prohibition, amendment can not be considered or understood apart from the legislation which preceded it. It is the high-water mark attained after 75 years of effort by the American people to reduce to a minimum the admitted evils from the traffic in intoxicating liquors. The one and the only purpose of the eighteenth amendment is, to quote the words of the preamble to the Constitution, "to promote the general welfare" by the restriction of the activities of the individual citizen in the manufacture, the sale, the transportation, the exportation, and the importation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. Intoxication is that condition in which a citizen has lost control of his physical, his intellectual, and his moral powers; in short, of himself. The one and only purpose of the eighteenth amendment, therefore, is "to promote the general welfare" by prohibiting the traffic in that which experience has demonstrated does cause hundreds of thousands of citizens to lose control of themselves, and to become, therefore, not only unfitted to perform properly the duties which they owe to the State, society at large, and their families, but frequently also to become a menace and a public nuisance. The fundamental question, therefore, before this committee is whether the eighteenth amendment and the enforcement act, commonly called the Volstead law, "do promote the general welfare." If not, will the legislation under consideration by this committee, if adopted, assist in that purpose?

PREVIOUS CONDITIONS AND LEGISLATION

No proper answer can be given to this question without some consideration of previous conditions and of past liquor legislation. It is difficult for the younger generation to visualize or, indeed, even to credit the actual conditions which existed in the good old days when men put their feet on the brass rail and blew the foam off the glass.

THE TRAFFIC LEGALIZED

1. In those days great distilleries and breweries were running openly and legally full blast, manufacturing hundreds of millions of gallons of intoxicants, saloons running up to the tens of thousands (over 175,000 in all) were found on the prominent corners of every village, town, and city, and intoxicants were sold and drunk publicly by men and women in hotels, high and low; intoxicants were sold in city and country clubs, and were served at practically all public dinners and banquets. To drink until one was a silly fool, or under the table, to be carried home or put to bed by others, was not only no disgrace but a proper ending of a midnight spree.

POLITICAL GRAFT AND CORRUPTION

2. The liquor traffic practically dominated the political life of town, city, State, and Nation. Its heavy hand was felt in elections of mayors, members of city councils, members of the police force, prosecuting attorneys, judges on the bench, members of legislatures, Members of Congress, and it insisted upon being consulted even on the matter of presidential nominations. No town or city ordinance, no State or congressional legislation which could possibly affect in any way the moral betterment of the community, the diminution of the sale of intoxicants, or of opportunities for gambling in any of its form, or restrictions upon red-light districts could be considered or adopted without the active, and usually successful opposition of the liquor traffic, acting through some agent or attorney of the State or National Liquor Dealers' Association. For 30 years I personally waged battle after battle with them in town, city, State, and Nation. The traffic had at its command all the forces of the underworld, with every ward heeler and political pimp, linked with men higher up in an ascending scale, until the slimy trail led to the office of the boss of the city or State. The graft and corruption in connection with prohibition enforcement of to-day concerning which so much clamor is raised by the opponents of the prohibition law is but a drop in the bucket, compared with the graft and corruption which prevailed everywhere in the old saloon days. Concerning this condition, the New York Times in an editorial utterance last year declared:

"The politicians ought to know that the country adopted the prohibitory amendment because among other things there had been a corrupting partnership between the saloon and the political organizations. It was difficult, if not impossible, to enforce such regulatory laws concerning the liquor traffic as there were, because the saloonkeeper had a pull with the politicians and was permitted to disregard the law as a reward for his assistance in election. The back room of the saloon was political headquarters, and there was a time when the saloon was the voting place, and the brewers and distillers subsidized political parties as the price to continue winking at irregularities."

A later editorial in the Times in August, 1925, declared:

"A correspondent of the London Observer emphasizes as one of the most important results of prohibition here the present freedom of our politics from saloon or liquor influence and control. That the bootleggers are quite without power in some of our lower political circles could not be denied safely, but it is a potty power compared with that which the saloon keepers of old exercised in practically every State, and nobody questions that the saloon is gone forever from the United States, and nobody ventures to defend it or to demand its return."

To those opponents of prohibition who are denouncing it because of the corruption and graft in connection with the bootlegging traffic, we would commend a study of the horrible conditions in preprohibition days.

SEAT OF VICE AND CRIME

3. In those days the saloon was the rendezvous, the harboring place, the recruiting station of vice and crime. Its allies were the gambling house and the brothel. Its back parlors and its wine rooms were the avenues to debauchery and ruin of multiplied thousands of women and girls. The number of girls and boys ruined to-day by hip-pocket flasks are few indeed compared to the slaughter of the innocents in those days. The immorality of the present day arises more from other causes. The transit from the saloon to the house of ill fame was easy, and intoxicants could be found there when the saloon was closed. Nine-tenths of the saloons were beer saloons, the most of them controlled by the great breweries. They were absolutely lawless. They obeyed no restriction. The brewers paid for police protection, and if some violations were too flagrant, the fines were paid, but the lawlessness continued. The greater part of the drunkenness was beer drunkenness. My college days were spent at a Methodist college in Virginia and a Presbyterian college at Princeton. The authorities of both institutions were opposed to drinking by the students, but there were saloons in both places, and although the law of Virginia forbade the sale of liquor to minors or to students, I helped carry my drunken classmates to their rooms and put them to bed. They were drunk, disgustingly drunk, on beer bought through a runner of the saloons, and there was far more drunkenness among the young people and among the college students in those days than there is to-day. I visited the homes of people in those days and saw husbands lying on the bed in a drunken stupor or so noisy and quarrelsome as to require the police. I saw wives and mothers, gaunt and hollow-eyed, weeping and despairing, working themselves to death to feed and care for their hungry, half-clothed, barefooted children. On one occasion the ladies of my church bought clothing and shoes and a coffin in which to bury a child who had died for lack of proper food, and the next morning when I came for the funeral service the father had taken the clothing and shoes to his saloon keeper and traded them for drink and was back in the house in a drunken rage. Those were some of the features of those days. Well may the opponents of prohibition assert and declare and asseverate that nobody wants the return of the saloons.

SALOON THE ISSUE

But, Mr. Chairman, the question before your committee is at bottom the question of the return of the saloon. We are told that a rose by any other name will smell as sweet, and a saloon by any other name will smell the same. The foul odor that hangs around the word "saloon" was caused by just one thing, namely, the sale of intox-eating liquors for beverage purposes. There is no evil odor attached to an ice-cream saloon, or a soft-drink saloon, because there is no evil result from the sale of those commodities, but the sale of intoxicants anywhere, under any conditions, produces the same evil results to a greater or less extent. The American people became convinced that the conditions to which I have referred above were the natural, inherent, necessary consequences of the traffic in intoxicants, and the legislation which has been adopted had for its purpose the elimination of those evils.

LIQUOR LAWLESSNESS COMPELLED PROHIBITION

4. The lawlessness of the liquor traffic compelled the adoption of national prohibition. Drawing upon my own experience in the State of Virginia for the past 40 years, the steps in liquor legislation have been as follows: Forty years ago licenses were granted by the judges of the court to applicants upon petition by a certain number of citizens who stated that the applicant was a man of good moral character and that the proposed place was a suitable and convenient place for the sale of intoxicating liquors. But the ever-present, destructive, horrible results of the sale of intoxicants became increasingly unbearable. The people demanded and secured a local-option law, but not without exactly the same kind of opposition and denunciation from the liquor traffic and its friends which has been staged at this very hearing before this committee.

The next step was a law enacted by the legislature which prohibited the granting of a license in any community of less than 500 population, unless the judge was satisfied that the granting of such a license would not be contrary to the material or moral interests of the community. This law struck at the very root of the question involved, and be it said to the credit of the Virginia bench that it was not willing to declare that the sale of intoxicants was not contrary to the material and moral interests of the community. This law swept every saloon out of the villages and country districts, and it worked so well that in four years it was extended to apply to communities of 1,000 and less. Then the country districts, the villages, towns, and small cities of the State, but the liquor traffic refusing to recognize the rights of the citizens in the dry territory, entrenched itself in the larger cities of the Commonwealth and endeavored in every possible way to flood the country districts with their prohibited goods. The much vaunted Quebec system is not new in principle. It is practically the old dispensary system of South Carolina, and it was tried by a number of towns in Virginia. It resulted in the establishment of restaurants, so-called, located near the dispensary, the proprietors of which rented tables to purchasers of liquor at the dispensary, and it was simply the transference of the place of drinking. Furthermore, the sale of intoxicants in packages, instead of by the drink, caused the purchase of such large quantities that the purchasers would frequently drink the liquor on their way home, or carry it to their homes and have a drinking party. The system was a failure, both in South Carolina and in Virginia, as any aid to true temperance, and was abolished as every other form of the liquor traffic for its high crimes and misdemeanors. Finally realizing that they could not in any other way protect their communities, their children, and their homes, the people adopted state-wide prohibition by popular vote, thus wiping out the traffic root and branch.

But the liquor traffic utterly refused to recognize the right of the people of Virginia to brand it as an outlaw, and it established liquor-shipping houses, especially in Baltimore, which circularized the State, even boys and college students, with advertisements of liquors and by automobile, railroad, and water craft, carried prohibited intoxicants into Virginia. It was this utter refusal on the part of the liquor traffic to recognize the rights of the States to protect themselves from the liquor traffic which forced the adoption of national prohibition. Senator Bruce, Governor Ritchie, Governor Smith, Senator Edge, and the other present-day advocates of the rights of the States to determine their liquor laws for themselves were not in evidence in those days demanding that the rights of the dry States to protection from the liquor traffic of the wet States be respected. Indeed, none of the gentlemen who have appeared at this hearing expressing such great concern as to the morality and sobriety of our people and their hatred of the abominable saloon, not even Mr. Brennan, of Chicago, were prominent in those days in their efforts to protect the morals of the people and to aid in banishing the saloon, which they now all agree is so vile that it can never be permitted to return. (It is hardly to be wondered at that the dry people of the Nation hesitate to follow these present-day apostles of morality and sobriety, but prefer to remain in the ranks of those who recognized and secured the abolition of the admittedly horrible saloon.) The effort was earnestly made to meet the situation by the adoption of the Webb-Kenyon bill and by what is known as the bone-dry Reed amendment, but as long as breweries, distilleries, shipping houses, and saloons were operating legally under the law of the States where located there was no possible way to curtail open legal production, and the intoxicants once having been produced, and the wet States, not only making no effort to pass any form of legislation which would curtail the outflow of intoxicants from their borders into dry territory, but rejoicing in the increased revenues which came to the wet States from heavy license fees, these liquors, by hook or by crook, by automobile, express, mail, freight, on railroad trains, on launches and steamers leaked—indeed, they poured—into the dry territory.

It can not be too strongly emphasized that it was this lawlessness of the legalized liquor traffic in the wet States and the utter disregard by the wet States not only of the opinions but of the rights of the people of the dry States which not simply precipitated but compelled nation-wide prohibition. The clamorous outcry, coming from thirsty throats in these wet States, that they be permitted to determine for themselves what shall be the legalized alcoholic content of beer and light wines, the solemn assertions made by these present-day States rights advocates that they are perfectly willing that the dry States shall determine what shall be the alcoholic content of beverages sold within their borders, must face fairly and fully the outstanding facts of liquor-legislation history. (Where were these advocates of States rights when the dry States were demanding the observance of their rights in the past?) How can it be expected that the dry States will pay any attention to such appeals or have any confidence in such pledges? Past experience proves conclusively that the liquor traffic respects no pledges. It violates all laws, and it would be folly, even were it constitutional, which it clearly is not, for the dry States of the Nation to agree to any such States rights control of alcoholic content. To legalize breweries and wineries to manufacture such beer and wine as is proposed by these bills would mean a return to the conditions before national prohibition. It would mean the removal of the brand of the outlaw, which is now upon the traffic, and would permit the manufacture and sale of unlimited quantities of beer and wine, and surreptitiously of spirituous liquors, much of which would pour into dry territory as in the past. As the representative of the constituency located largely in those States which suffered in the past from the lawlessness of the liquor traffic in the wet States, I speak for my people and say that we will not surrender the protection which we have secured by the national prohibition law from the lawless, legalized traffic of the wet sector of the Nation. Moreover, we demand that the national prohibition law be enforced in any wet sector of the country at no matter what cost in men or money, in order that the rest of the country may be protected from the contamination from the lawless, outlawed, defiant liquor traffic and its patrons, high or low, just as one section of the country is protected from the foot-and-mouth disease among cattle, or cholera and smallpox among persons, which may be prevalent in another section.

Gentlemen have appeared before this committee and have declared that the prohibition law can not be enforced; indeed, they have gone further than that. They have declared through Senator Bruce on the floor of the United States Senate itself that there is an element of the population which will refuse to obey the law; that the affluent classes will have their liquor, Constitution or no Constitution. Of course, this is nothing new in the conflict of the people with the liquor traffic and its devotees. They have always declared, either in word or in act, that they will not obey any law which restricts appetite or covetousness. I am not here to declare that the eighteenth amendment and the provisions of the Volstead Act are either observed or enforced universally. No laws of any kind in any country, not even the ten commandments, which admittedly are approved by the moral sense of the average man, are universally obeyed. Men profane the name of God, disobey parents, kill, commit adultery, steal, lie, covet; indeed, men sometimes seem to flaunt themselves in the very face of God. But what community denounces or thinks of calling for the repeal of the ten commandments because they are persistently violated. The question at issue is not whether the ten commandments are violated, but whether it made for the uplift and betterment of humanity that God should express His will in these laws, and tell men what they ought not to do. (The amazing proposition that to prohibit a certain action is to incite disobedience and a determination to do the very thing which has been prohibited is not only false and absurd, but it is an insult to the wisdom and goodness of God. All social community life worthy of the name is based upon reciprocal rights and duties, and is perpetuated by the observance or enforcement of regulations or laws agreed upon by society as necessary "to promote the general welfare.") The fact that some men continually refuse to do their duty and continually infringe upon the rights of others is no reason for the repeal of regulations or laws which are helpful to the social order. There were over 100,000 violations of the traffic laws in New York City alone last year, and a proportionate number throughout the country, resulting in about 25,000 deaths and 700,000 minor injuries.

A very large proportion of these traffic violations arise from careless, headstrong, or selfish chauffeurs who want to drive as they please, without restrain or without regard to the rights of others. New York City is stirred to-day by an investigation of outrageous graft in the handling of the milk supply of the city, in which it is charged that not only milk producers and dealers but city officials are involved. Such violations arise from the covetousness of those involved, which utterly disregard the health of others. In a specially prepared article

In the New York Times about a year ago, it was stated that of the total revenue of over $1,800,000,000 paid into the United States Treasury from income-tax receipts, $514,000,000 were added to the payments after officers of the Government had indicated to those making returns the desirability, indeed the necessity, of making these additions, and the article stated that there were probably more violators of the income tax law than of any other law on the statute books, not excepting the Volstead Act, and there were 10,000 investigators in that department. Such violations arise from selfish or covetous unwillingness to bear one's proportionate share for the support of the Government.

Has any clamor arisen for the repeal of the laws indicated above because they are persistently, willfully, and flagrantly violated? The question at issue, therefore, is not whether the prohibition law is observed and enforced universally. It is not whether there is an element of the population which defiantly declares through Senator BRUCE that it will have its liquor, Constitution or no Constitution. It is not whether there are multiplied thousands or even so many millions out of 115,000,000 of people of the United States who openly declare that they will gratify their appetites for intoxicants, regardless of its effect upon the general welfare. Selfish individualism has always placed the gratification of its own appetites and desires above the general welfare, and society has registered its advances by its triumphs over the tyranny of selfish individualism.

IS PROHIBITION BEST METHOD?

Of course, no one is so foolish as to expect that the prohibition law will not be violated just as other laws are violated, but the first great question before this committee for settlement is not whether the prohibition law is observed and enforced, but whether the results obtained have demonstrated that the present prohibition law is a better method of promoting the general welfare than any method which has been tried heretofore. Are physical, economic, moral, and domestic conditions better in the United States since the adoption of the prohibition law, or are they worse? The second question is, Would any of the measures now before the committee, if enacted into law, be beneficial or detrimental to the best interests of the people as a whole?

NEW YORK SECTOR TESTIMONY

It is noteworthy that the testimony which has been presented before the committee by opponents of the present prohibition law has come almost entirely from persons living in what for convenience may be called the New York sector of the country, including the States of New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, with some support from the city of Boston on the east and Chicago on the west. Two of these States, Maryland and New York, have utterly refused to pass any State enforcement law, and yet the very men in these States who are largely responsible for the failure to pass an enforcement law are the ones who are loudly and illogically denouncing the failure to enforce the law. Judged by any ordinary standards, these men do not want the law to be enforced, and how can they expect anyone to be influenced by their clamor about liquor lawlessness in their communities. The State of New Jersey, from which much clamor has arisen, is in the unfortunate position of being dominated by the large foreign-born population of Jersey City and Hudson County, although even New Jersey seems to be improving, for the 88,000 majority given to Senator EDWARDS was reduced to 35,000 given to Governor MOORE, a reduction of over 50,000, and when it is remembered that Hudson County gave approximately 108,000 wet majority, shows that there is a majority of 70,000 in the rest of the State for law enforcement. A similar decrease in majority would wipe out the wet majority entirely in the next election.

Some of the witnesses who testified concerning the lawlessness, drunkenness, and immorality in the sections where they lived and among the people with whom they are acquainted, made such sweeping statements that one is led to wonder what the people themselves who were thus characterized would say. One witness told of touring the country for two years, covering over 30,000 miles, and declared that nowhere did he find any sentiment in support of the Volstead Act. One stated that the making of whisky in the home is becoming general; that 90 per cent of the workmen are either making wine, beer, or whisky. A member of the Maryland Legislature from Baltimore City declared that his business required him to visit in the homes of laboring people, and that in all the homes he visited had a still. A Roman Catholic priest from a mining town in Pennsylvania declared that mothers were violating the law, and girls and boys of 14 were engaging in indecent parties. The Congressman from Jersey City painted a horrible condition of affairs in that city, declaring that prohibition had turned men to the use of drugs, changing drunken husbands into crazy husbands. Now, I am not here to attack the honesty and sincerity of any witness who has testified, but for myself I flatly deny that there are any such conditions in the sections of the country in which I travel, certainly among the people with whom I am brought in contact, either in business, social, or religious matters, or among those people who come under my observation. Since the year 1894 I have been engaged in work which has compelled me to travel the greater part of my time. During the past five years I have averaged over 200,000 miles yearly. I am familiar with the cities of the South and Southwest. I am frequently for a brief stay in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Buffalo, Detroit, Chicago, Columbus, Louisville, St. Louis, and Kansas City. I average at least two or three visits to New York every month. I am in Cuba and Mexico two or three times every year. I have averaged two trips to Europe for the past six or seven years, and have been to Canada five times during that period. When on the Strand and Fleet Street in London, and in the cafés of Geneva, I have seen more intoxicated persons in a day than I have seen in the United States in a year. Just two weeks ago in Cuba the car in which I was riding was struck by a car of two Cubans drunk on wine.

I have been specially interested in the study of social conditions all my life. From the time of my student days at Princeton. I have rarely been in any city overnight that I have not walked in various sections of those cities for from one to three hours at night, and as I rarely wear clerical clothes, I have not attracted any special attention. I have never seen in any of these cities such horrible conditions as have been described on the witness stand at these hearings, nor can I be made to believe without actual count that 90 per cent of the laboring people of this country are violating the Constitution of the United States, as well as the obligations they owe to their own children by the manufacture of intoxicants in their homes. As an American citizen I repudiate these wholesale assertions as not applying to the great mass of our American people. Certainly they do not apply to the more than 21,000,000 Sunday school scholars, 5,000,000 members of young people's societies, and over 30,000,000 church members of the Protestant churches.

DIFFICULTIES IN ENFORCEMENT

The advocates of changes in the prohibition law have declared that it was impossible to enforce the prohibition law because neither smuggling nor the diversion of alcohol for bootlegging purposes, nor illicit distilling can be prevented. Certainly, these things can not be absolutely entirely prevented. But General ANDREWS has stated that the smuggling has been so reduced that in his judgment not more than 5 or 10 per cent of the amounts which originally were smuggled in is now being smuggled in. The fact that he did not know how much of the amount that really did manage to slip by was seized is not a matter of any practical importance. That is purely a matter of guess work. The Government officials declare that smuggling for commercial purposes is practically under control. As a matter of fact, Great Britain did not export over 8,000,000 gallons of distilled liquors to the entire world last year, of which amount not more than 5,000,000 could by any possibility have come to North America.

If all of it was smuggled into the United States, it would have amounted to less than one-half pint per capita per annum for the whole country. Mr. BUCKNER estimated that the amount of alcohol diverted from legitimate purposes to bootlegging purposes was approximately 60,000,000 gallons. But this was purely fantastic guesswork and was more than four times as much as the estimate of the prohibition department. The basis of his calculation that there has been an increase of only 1,000,000 gallons per annum for the past five years in legitimate consumption is unwarranted. The number of automobiles in the country has increased from 10,000,000 to 20,000,000 in the past six years, and the number of closed cars, which can be used in winter with comfort, has increased from about 28 per cent to 85 per cent of the entire number. People are using antifreeze mixture who never used it before, and the amount allotted for that purpose is declared to be over 30,000,000 gallons, which is less than a gallon and a half per car per season. If it be put at only 1 gallon per car per season, the amount would be 20,000,000 gallons for the past year, showing an increase of more than tenfold in excess of Mr. Buckner's estimate of 1,000,000 gallons of this one item alone. As a matter of fact the use of alcohol for legitimate industrial purposes has increased in my own State of Virginia more than 100,000 gallons per year for the past five years, so that an industrial plant has been established in Norfolk to supply the steadily increasing legitimate need.

ILLICIT DISTILLATION

There is undoubtedly much illicit distillation. There always has been. There were moonshiners all through the southern mountains before prohibition, and the appetite for alcohol was not destroyed when the prohibitory law was passed, and, as the Senator from Missouri has demonstrated from time to time before the committee, it is not very difficult to manufacture or expensive to buy some sort of a still. But here, again, outside of the number actually captured by the prohibition officers, all calculation is purely guesswork. It is easy to figure that 175,000 stills of all sorts and sizes captured in a year could each average 40 gallons per day, or a total of 7,000,000 gallons for the 175,000 stills for the day's run, 210,000 gallons for a month, or 2,520,000,000 gallons for a year.

Then if the department captured only one-tenth as it was conjectured, and there are 1,750,000 stills in operation, then the capacity for those stills would be over 25,000,000,000 gallons for a year, which for a population of 115,000,000, would give an average of over 200 gallons per capita per year. If a question of this kind is to be settled by guess work, then, of course, there is no possibility that the prohibition law can be enforced, for the whole country would be deluged with hypothetical liquor from hypothetical stills. If time would permit, I should be very glad to present to the committee in detail certain statistics which I think have a decided bearing on this question of the effects of prohibition, but I have barely time to refer to them. I file with the committee the report of the joint legislative committee on the coordination of civil and criminal practice acts, which report has been made to the present session of the New York Legislature. I simply call the attention of the committee to the statistics found on page 33, which show in Table A all reported convictions in all courts of the State from 1900 to October 31, 1925. Pointing out the convictions for intoxication in the entire State of New York, it is found that the convictions increased from 8,267 to 31,254 in 1917; that they decreased to 5,287 in 1920; that they increased to 17,269 in 1924; and that they decreased to 15,670 in 1925, showing a 50 per cent decrease between 1917 and 1925, although the population of the State has increased several hundred thousand from 1917 to 1925. I also call the attention of the committee to Table H on page 41, which gives the number of persons convicted in courts of record for the year 1925 at 8,914. Of this number 8,427 were reported as temperate, only 436 as intemperate, and 49 unknown, which indicates that only about 5 per cent of the crimes for which persons were convicted were committed by persons addicted to intoxicants, which seems to indicate that the crime wave, which has been attributed by witnesses at this hearing to the drinking of bootleg liquor, is not attributable to that cause.

I also file with the committee the preliminary report of the census of prisoners for 1923 from the Department of Commerce of the United States. On page 3 of this bulletin will be found a table showing the distribution of prisoners according to the offense or crime of which they have been convicted. In both 1910 and 1923 the table shows that the commitments for drunkenness outnumbered those for every other offense, decreasing, however, from 170,914 in 1910 to 91,367 in 1923, which, the census bulletin indicates, making an allowance for an increase in population, showed a ratio of 185.9 per cent per hundred thousand of population in 1910, against 83.1 per cent per hundred thousand in 1923, showing a decrease of 55.3 per cent in convictions for drunkenness in 1923. I know that there are many other tables presented on this question of intoxication, but I present this official bulletin of the United States Government as reliable and most probably indicative of the tremendous effect which prohibition has had upon the convictions for drunkenness.

I also submit the following figures concerning juvenile delinquency compiled by the research department of the World League Against Alcoholism, under the direction of Dr. Robert E. Corradini, from official records of Boston, Cook County, Ill., and New York City. These records show that the arrests of children under 15 in the city of Boston have decreased since 1913 to 1924 from 2,294 to 1,596, and from 1918 to 1,596. The figures from Cook County, including Chicago, for the years 1916 to 1923, inclusive, show that arrests for child delinquency had decreased from 3,306 in 1918 to 1,282 in 1923. The records for delinquent girls in Cook County for the same period show a decrease from 730 in 1918 to 532 in 1923. The records for the children's court of New York from 1913 to 1924 show a steady decrease from 8,015 in 1913 to 4,385 in 1924.

I present records showing the work done by the Children's Aid Society of New York, which indicate a shifting of program of the work of the society, indicating a decrease in purely charity work to an increase in constructive welfare work. For illustration, the number of families under the care of the society decreased from 2,024 in 1914 to 1,261 in 1925. The number of persons sheltered in lodging houses decreased from 6,319 in 1914 to 1,646 in 1925. The number of children benefited through the fresh-air fund increased from 17,000 in 1917 to 116,000 in 1925. The meals given to school children decreased from 637,000 in 1917 to 262,000 in 1925. I also present the statistical data from the Bowery Mission, showing a decrease in charity work, an increase in constructive work, and a great increase in opportunity for spiritual work. I call attention to only one item, namely, that of night's lodging. Men and boys sheltered in night's lodging in 1914 were 44,900; in 1925, 8,760; free meals in 1914, 809,777; in 1925, 67,574.

In order that I might be able to state to this committee the attitude of the people whom I represent, I decided to secure from them an expression of opinion upon certain important factors in the present situation. As chairman of the Commission on Temperance and Social Service, I prepared and sent out a questionnaire to every minister and to every lay leader in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The questionnaire called for the following information:

Question 1. Did you favor the adoption of the eighteenth amendment?

Question 2. With about how many people are you ordinarily in contact?

Question 3. Are home conditions better or worse since the adoption of prohibition (a) as to food, (b) clothing, (c) home comforts and conveniences, (d) increase in personal ownership of homes, (e) recreation and amusements, (f) school opportunities?

Question 4. Do you personally observe more or less drinking and drunkenness now than in the saloon days (a) in the home, (b) in public places, such as hotels, restaurants, places of amusement, streets, trains, (c) among young people of all classes—laboring, factory, clerks, stenographers, students, society?

Question 5. Would the sale of wine and beer make conditions better or worse in your community?

Question 6. Do you think wine and beer could be manufactured and distributed without the lawlessness and the corruption of the saloon days?

Question 7. Is there as much political graft and corruption to-day as when the saloon dominated town, city, State, and national elections?

Question 8. If the law is not as well enforced in your community as it should be, what suggestions do you make to secure more effective enforcement?

Question 9. In the light of all the facts as you personally see them, not as newspapers or other persons report them, do you still favor prohibition?

Question 10. Is the church in your community as active in its efforts to uphold the law and to conserve its benefits as it was to secure its enactment?

This questionnaire was not sent out until after these hearings began, but already over 6,000 replies have been received, of which the following have been tabulated:

Maryland, 54; Virginia, 510; North Carolina, 432; South Carolina, 262; Georgia, 435; Florida, 160; West Virginia, 236; Ohio, 2; Indiana, 2; Illinois, 34; Kentucky, 330; Tennessee, 565; Alabama, 336; Mississippi, 270; Louisiana, 104; Arkansas, 226; Missouri, 418; Nebraska, 1; Kansas, 6; Colorado, 11; Oklahoma, 154; Texas, 760; New Mexico, 26; Arizona, 16; California, 26; Oregon, 5; Washington, 1; Idaho, 2; Montana, 3; District of Columbia, 11.

The answers to this questionnaire are coming in by every mail, and I shall ask permission of the committee to change these figures and insert the correct number after all the answers have been received and properly tabulated. I think it is proper to emphasize that the answers to the questions given above were made by pastors, presiding elders, educators, editors, connectional officers, and bishops, plus lay leaders of the church, which lay leaders are men chosen by the various congregations throughout Southern Methodism as the one best qualified to lead the congregation in carrying on the varied activities of the church. I believe that the men who have answered this questionnaire are the equal of any other similar number of men in this country in good practical common sense, knowledge of human nature, knowledge of conditions in communities in which they live, genuine interest in the welfare of the people, sincerity, integrity, and general moral character. If they are not patriotic citizens, if they do not love their country, if their sincerity can not be trusted, I know of no men who are patriotic, sincere lovers of their country. Their testimony comes up to this committee not absolutely unanimous on every point but practically so, for the replies received and tabulated up to this time, and out of approximately 6,000 individual answers, all but three declared that home conditions are better since the adoption of prohibition, that food, clothing and comforts, conveniences, increase in personal ownership of homes, recreations, and amusements in the home and public places and among young people than in the saloon days.

All but 10 declare that the sale of wine and beer would make conditions worse in their community. All but 10 declare that they do not think wine and beer could be manufactured and distributed without the lawlessness and corruption of the saloon days, for as many of them state that the sale and distribution of beer would either require beer parlors or saloons, or would turn the home into a drinking place with the evil consequences attendant thereupon. All but six declare that there is not as much political graft and corruption to-day as when the saloon dominated town, city, State, and national elections. All but nine declare that in the light of all the facts as they personally see them they do still favor national prohibition, and all but one of these declare that they prefer prohibition if it were effectively enforced. The very large majority state that in their judgment the churches have not been as active in their efforts to uphold the law and to conserve its benefits as they were to secure its enactment, because the tendency has been to think that now that the law has been passed it is the duty of the Government to make adequate appropriations, elect suitable officers, and to prosecute offenders. The opinion is very generally expressed that the present aggressive activity of the opponents of prohibition will stir the churches to a recognition of the necessity for greater activity in support of the law and of its effective enforcement.

The suggestions made to secure more effective enforcement of the law are naturally somewhat varied, but there are a very few out of the entire number who do not insist upon certain things:

First. That to secure effective enforcement, the work must be committed to those who believe that the prohibition law is a good law, that it can and should be enforced as effectively as other laws of a similar character, such as the narcotic drug act, the income tax law, the Mann law, etc.

Second. It is also insisted that adequate salaries should be paid to secure such men as are qualified to enforce so important and difficult a law.

Third. That whatever number of men are necessary to properly enforce the law in any section of the country should be provided for that section.

Fourth. That the Government should appropriate whatever amount may be necessary to enforce the law.

Fifth. That more stringent penalties should be inflicted upon the violators of the law.

If the Treasury Department considers it of vital importance to have sufficient men and money to enforce effectively the income tax law, which is purely a revenue measure, it is certainly of equal importance to enforce the prohibition law.

As the representative of my people I feel justified in supporting the measures proposed by General Andrews, giving additional search-and-seizure powers in cases of manufacture for sale and for sale itself. The defiant declaration was made by Senator BRUCE on the floor of the Senate itself that the affluent classes will have their liquor, Constitution or no Constitution, is a frank statement of the liquor traffic and its devotees. It is not simply a question of whether the manufacture and the sale of a glass of beer in itself alone should be classed as a misdemeanor or a felony. The issue squarely made to-day is whether the open, defiant declaration that a large body of men are determined to nullify the Constitution, to snap their fingers in the faces of the Government and of the great majority of the American people, which the Government represents, shall be met, as it squarely deserves, by an equally open, positive, clear-cut declaration that the national prohibition law imbedded in the Constitution of the United States shall not be ridiculed, flouted, or nullified, but that the majority of the people will demand of their Government that whatever amount of money may be necessary and whatever force of men may be required to secure proper obedience to the law shall be furnished; that the admittedly remarkable and great benefits which followed the enactment of the law in 1920 and 1921, because the law was generally obeyed, shall be permanently secured for the benefit of the great masses of the people of the country, regardless of the clamor and protests of the defiant, lawless minority.

SUSQUEHANNA RIVER BRIDGE, PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent for the receipt of a report from the Committee on Commerce on a bill relative to a bridge across the Susquehanna River.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. BINGHAM. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 10002) granting the consent of Congress to H. J. Stannert, Harry Wels, and George W. Rockwell to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Susquehanna River from a point in the city of Sunbury, Northumberland County, to a point in the township of Monroe, in Snyder County, in the State of Pennsylvania, and I submit a report (No. 652) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] to it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to H. J. Stannert, Harry Wels, and George W. Rockwell, their legal representatives and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Susquehanna River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between a point in the city of Sunbury, Northumberland County, Pa., and a point opposite in the township of Monroe, Snyder County, Pa., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. The said H. J. Stannert, Harry Wels, and George W. Rockwell, their legal representatives and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in such act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 3. After the date of completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Pennsylvania, any political subdivision thereof within which any part of such bridge is located, or two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase, or by condemnation in accordance with the law of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 30 years after the completion of such bridge it is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in respect of such bridge and approaches, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion costs (not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of construction of such bridge and approaches and the acquisition of such interests in real property), and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 4. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by any municipality or other political subdivision or subdivisions of the State of Pennsylvania under the provisions of section 3 of this act, and if tolls are charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid for such bridge and its approaches as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of acquiring the bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of daily tolls collected shall be kept, and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The said H. J. Stannert, Harry Wels, and George W. Rockwell, their legal representatives and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, including the actual cost of acquiring interests in real property and actual financing and promotion costs. Within three years after the completion of such bridge the Secretary of War may investigate the actual cost of such bridge, and for such purpose the said H. J. Stannert, Harry Wels, and George W. Rockwell, their legal representatives and assigns, shall make available to the Secretary of War all of their records in connection with the financing and construction thereof. The finding of the Secretary of War as to such actual original cost shall be conclusive, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 6. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said H. J. Stannert, Harry Wels, and George W. Rockwell, their legal representatives and assigns, and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

SEC. 7. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ELIZABETH RIVER BRIDGE, NORFOLK COUNTY, VA.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent for the receipt of a report from the Committee on Commerce in regard to a bridge near Norfolk, Va.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. BINGHAM. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 7093) granting the consent of Congress to O. Emmerson Smith, F. F. Priest, W. P. Jordan, H. W. West, C. M. Jordan, and G. Hubard Massey to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the southern branch of the Elizabeth River at or near the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth, in the county of Norfolk, in the State of Virginia, and I submit a report (No. 653) thereon. I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to O. Emmerson Smith, F. F. Priest, W. P. Jordan, H. W. West, C. M. Jordan, and G. Hubard Massey, their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the southern branch of the Elizabeth River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth, in the county of Norfolk, in the State of Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

The construction of such bridge shall not be commenced nor shall any alterations of such bridge be made either before or after its completion until the plans and specifications for such construction or alterations have been first submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Agriculture, acting jointly, and they, acting jointly, shall determine whether the location selected is feasible for the erection of such bridge without obstructions in navigation and without being detrimental to the development of interstate and foreign as well as domestic commerce moving to and from the particular location on the southern branch of the Elizabeth River to the inland waters of the State concerned, and whether public convenience will be served by such bridge as a connecting link between the Federal-aid highway systems of the State of Virginia. The said Secretaries, acting jointly, are empowered and, if requested to do so, are directed to hold public hearings for the full and complete determination of said precedent requirements.

SEC. 2. That said O. Emmerson Smith, F. F. Priest, W. P. Jordan, H. W. West, C. M. Jordan, and G. Hubard Massey, their successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in such act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 3. After the date of completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Virginia, any political subdivision thereof within which any part of such bridge is located, or two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase, or by condemnation in accordance with the law of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge it is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in respect of such bridge and approaches, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion costs (not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of construction of such bridge and approaches and the acquisition of such interests in real property), and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by any municipality or other political subdivision or subdivisions of the State of Virginia, under the provisions of section 3 of this act, and if tolls are charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid for such bridge and its approaches as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of acquiring the bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The said O. Emmerson Smith, F. F. Priest, W. P. Jordan, H. W. West, C. M. Jordan, and G. Hubard Massey, their successors and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, including the actual cost of acquiring interests in real property and actual financing and promotion costs. Within three years after the completion of such bridge the Secretary of War may investigate the actual cost of such bridge, and for such purpose the said O. Emmerson Smith, F. F. Priest, W. P. Jordan, H. W. West, C. M. Jordan, and G. Hubard Massey, their successors and assigns, shall make available to the Secretary of War all of their records in connection with the financing and construction thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to such actual original cost shall be conclusive, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 6. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said O. Emmerson Smith, F. F. Priest, W. P. Jordan, H. W. West, C. M. Jordan, and G. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, April 23, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Father, Thou hast blest and trusted us. We desire above all things to be worthy of Thy confidence. Have mercy upon us. Let not the evil in our hearts darken the outlook of our souls. May all our lives be magnified in wisdom, charity, and humility. We wonder of Thy loving patience. Oh, do Thou help us to escape the tendencies of our own desires and ambitions. Show us real values and teach us the larger meaning of the commonplace. Make us strong of will, so that we shall be overcomers in the presence of all temptations. Provide a way for the discouraged, the wounded, and the sick. Bless us with a hunger for all those virtues that lift us to the highest service for our country. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, several days ago the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] requested that there be inserted in the RECORD the remarks of Commissioner Burke taken at a hearing before the Committee on Indian Affairs. That request was made when I was not present. I knew nothing about it, but objection was heard, and afterwards I was asked if there was objection on my part, and I said no, but I would like at the same time to make a brief statement when it was inserted in the RECORD. I have tried to get time, but I find that the time is all promised. I now ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the order this morning I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the order heretofore made this morning he may be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. When does the gentleman want to speak?

Mr. FREAR. At the conclusion of the remarks of other gentlemen who have been given leave to address the House.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. May I inquire upon what subject?

Mr. FREAR. With reference to Indian affairs. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] asked to insert the testimony of Commissioner Burke in the RECORD, to which I consented.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDSON. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if it is to continue the discussion that he already has had in the RECORD?

Mr. FREAR. It is for the purpose of answering the remarks of the commissioner, who had the exclusive right to talk for almost three hours before the committee.

Mr. HUDSON. I do not want to object, but the gentleman from Wisconsin had plenty of time in committee and did not take the time. I do not think the RECORD ought to be encumbered with this.

Mr. FREAR. The commissioner talked for about three hours without interruption. I only want 15 minutes now.

Mr. HUDSON. Can not the gentleman take another day?

Mr. FREAR. I want it to go in to-morrow, and I understand that there may be an adjournment over to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

ALIEN PROPERTY

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting in the RECORD a letter from my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] on the subject of German alien property.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter of his colleague Mr. MILLS in relation to alien property. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Reserving the right to object, that letter was addressed to the New York Herald-Tribune, was it not?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. This morning's issue contains an editorial in reply to the letter. Will the gentleman put them in side by side?

Mr. BACON. I do not care to include that in my request.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. It seems to me that that would be only fair play.

Mr. BACON. Probably the gentleman will put that in later.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me, I insert herewith a letter of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] addressed to the editor of the Herald-Tribune of New York:

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1926.

THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD-TRIBUNE,
225 West Fortyeth Street, New York City, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: Under date of April 19 the Herald-Tribune in a leading editorial urges the Congress to confiscate the German property held by the Alien Property Custodian and to apply that property to the payment of American citizens having claims against the German Government.

It is impossible for me to believe that the Herald-Tribune's conclusions are based on a thorough understanding of the situation. Such a program could not be carried out without violating our solemn word and express provision of the treaty of Berlin, the Constitution of the United States, and our own traditional observance of sound international practice and good public morals.

Let me take up these questions in order:

1. On February 8, 1917, at a time when Germans and Austrians were beginning to withdraw their bank deposits and other property, for fear of its seizure in the event of war, the Secretary of State issued a statement, with presidential sanction. It was as follows:

"It having been reported to him that there is anxiety in some quarters on the part of persons residing in this country who are the subjects of foreign states lest their bank deposits or other property should be seized in the event of war between the United States and a foreign nation, the President authorizes the statement that all such fears are entirely unfounded. The Government of the United States will in no circumstances take advantage of a state of war to take possession of property to which international understandings and the recognized law of the land give it no just claim or title. It will scrupulously respect all private rights alike of its own citizens and of the subjects of foreign states."

SAYS IT WOULD BREAK WORD

At that time there was still ample opportunity to withdraw much of this property, and much of it remained in this country, relying on the solemn pledge of the American Government. To confiscate it to-day would be to break our word and be guilty of a gross breach of faith.

2. Section 5 of the treaty of Berlin, repeating the provisions of the joint resolution of July 2, 1921, provides that the property "shall be retained by the United States of America and no disposition thereof made . . . until such time as the Imperial German Government shall have made suitable provision for the satisfaction of all claims against said government of American citizens." It will be noted that the specific provision here authorizes the United States Government to hold the property until Germany has made provision for the settlement of American claims, and, as I will show below, it is very clear that this is in complete harmony with the understanding and intentions of the American Government, as shown by the entire history of this case.

It is true that section 2 of the same treaty gives to the United States the rights that it would have enjoyed had it signed the treaty of Versailles and that these rights include authority to confiscate the property; but read in connection with section 5, it seems reasonably certain that what the United States did under the terms of the treaty of Berlin was to retain the right to confiscate, while specifically pledging itself not to exercise that right but merely to hold the property. In any event, your advice could not be followed without totally disregarding the provisions of the joint resolution of July 2, 1921, and of section 5 of the treaty of Berlin.

3. The alien property can not be confiscated to-day without violating the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

NO INTENT TO CONFISCATE

The property in question was seized under the so-called trading with the enemy act of October 6, 1917, which provided that the Alien Property Custodian should seize and hold the said property as a common-law trustee, and the provisions of which, as well as the debate in the Congress at the time, make it entirely clear that there was no intent to confiscate the property, but only to sequester it during the war period.

The joint resolution of July 2, 1921, terminating the state of war with Germany, and the treaty of Berlin, above referred to, whatever rights they may have conferred on the United States as to future action, make it entirely clear that at the time the war formally ended and we resumed peaceful relations with Germany the United States Government had not confiscated the property. This view is completely confirmed by the action of our Government in enacting the Winslow Act in 1923, under the terms of which property up to the value of $10,000 was returned to the enemy aliens, and what is even more important, which provided that the Alien Property Custodian is directed to pay to the person entitled thereto the income from the seized estates up to $10,000 a year.

In other words, if the Alien Property Custodian is in possession of a house in New York City belonging to a German national yielding net rents of $10,000 a year, he is to-day paying over those rents to the German. Could there be more conclusive proof that under the law of the United States to-day the beneficial interest in that property is vested in the German citizen?

As Judge Learned Hand said in 1923: "I take it that the United States was not looking for plunder, but to prevent enemies from holding property within its borders. Congress has not yet committed itself to confiscation of enemy property, and the rules of international law have been against it for two centuries."

The Government of the United States, having failed to confiscate the property under its war powers, now that the war has been over for almost five years, is forbidden to do so by the Constitution of the United States.

DECLARES COURT FORBIDS

"The Supreme Court on numerous occasions has said that, after the war period has passed and the period of peace has come, you can not exercise extraordinary war powers."

"Since, therefore, we did not confiscate this property during the war, and since the war has been ended for the last five years, we are forbidden by Article V of the Constitution to take private property for public use without just compensation.

"4. We can not confiscate this property without violating our own traditional observance of sound international practice and good public morals. Up to the signing of the treaty of Versailles the inviolability of private property of enemy citizens was recognized by practically every civilized nation. The principle was recognized as early as Magna Charta. The Herald-Tribune would have us revert to a practice which was regarded as too harsh by the rough barons who extorted the great charter from King John.

"As late as 1918 the English House of Lords reiterated the time-honored doctrine that 'It is not the law of this country that the property of enemy subjects is confiscated. Until the restoration of peace the enemy can, of course, make no claim to have it delivered up to him, but when peace is restored he is considered as entitled to his property with any fruits it may have borne in the meanwhile.'

"Our own record has been consistent and sound. The principle was recognized in the Jay Treaty of 1794, and in 1802 we actually paid to Great Britain some $3,000,000 to make good acts of confiscation against British subjects practiced by some of the States in the Revolutionary War."

QUOTES ALEXANDER HAMILTON

Alexander Hamilton said: "No powers of language at my command can express the abhorrence I feel at the idea of violating the property of individuals which, in an authorized intercourse in time of peace, has been confided to the faith of our Government and laws, on account of controversy between nation and nation. In my view, every moral and every political sense unite to consign it to execration."

The principle was again recognized in our treaties with Prussia in 1799 and of 1828.

In United States v. Percheman (32 U. S. 51), decided in 1833, John Marshall, in declaring that this modern usage of nations had become law, said: "The modern usage of nations which had become law would be violated; that sense of justice and right which is acknowledged and felt by the whole civilized world would be outraged, if private property should be confiscated and private rights annulled."

Since the day we became a nation to the present day, I don't know of an instance of the United States violating a practice which seems to me based upon every consideration of honor and respect for those moral principles which should guide the conduct of nations as well as individuals. I believe that upon second thought the Herald-Tribune will agree with me that the time has not come to mar this record and to destroy so fine a tradition.

Very truly yours,

OGDEN L. MILLS.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following order:

Ordered, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate is now organized for the trial of articles of impeachment against George W. English, district judge of the United States for the eastern district of Illinois, and is ready to receive the managers on the part of the House.

ADDRESS BY MR. JOHNSON OF WASHINGTON BEFORE DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

MR. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, our colleague from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] was honored by delivering a patriotic address before the Daughters of the American Revolution. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing a speech by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MR. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks by printing the speech delivered by our colleague, Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON, of Washington, before the Thirty-fifth Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution, I print same as follows, to wit:

The PRESIDENT GENERAL (Mrs. Anthony Wayne Cook). It is the privilege of the president general to present the Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON, of the State of Washington.

Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON. Madam President General and members of the Thirty-fifth Continental Congress. It was my great honor to appear before the congress of this great organization two years ago for a five-minute speech, in which I was able to announce that the House and Senate were at that moment passing what is now known as the immigration restriction act of 1924. I had the privilege of saying from this platform that I regarded that act as America's second Declaration of Independence.

To-day I am able to announce to this great patriotic body that the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman has just reported to the House a bill to make more effective the deportation of criminal and defective aliens. [Applause.] I think this measure will pass both House and Senate. [Applause.]

Under the provision of this bill we propose to send out of the country, after proper examination with the presence of attorneys for the accused, alien criminals, alien gunmen, alien dealers in habit-forming narcotic drugs, alien bootleggers [applause], and all others who persist in violating the laws of the United States after they have come here from other countries. [Applause.]

If you will permit me, I think we will name this new bill, which I hope will soon be a law, the United States house-cleaning act. [Applause.]

My friends, I have always been interested in the work of the Daughters of the American Revolution toward true Americanization of those upstanding aliens who are among us.

You will be interested to know that we have in process of preparation a new naturalization act by which we hope to treat the well-meaning alien better and with more sympathy and at the same time make more sure that those aliens who come into the rights of citizenship in the United States, including the right to vote in the various States, shall read, write, and understand the English language. [Applause.]

You have no doubt heard statements which were the result of hearings by our committee that there are probably 1,000,000 aliens in the United States who can not prove that they are legally here. That statement immediately becomes exaggerated into a statement that there are 1,000,000 aliens in the United States who should be deported. My friends, that is not the case. Those aliens who have come in in the past, prior to the new immigration law of July 1, 1924, and have been here three years in nearly all cases or five years in some cases, can not be deported on account of the statute of limitations.

We have in the United States about 7,000,000 aliens. Of these, about 1,000,000 can not prove that they are legally here, and yet they are lawfully here owing to the limitations of the law. About 300,000 of that million came across the borders from Canada between the years 1906 and 1911, inclusive, at which time the law provided that they should have certificates of entry. The law did not provide the machinery for such certificates except for those who came from across the waters. So all of those Canadians who came between those dates who now try to be naturalized can not produce the very evidence that the Government requires to be produced.

They should be relieved of that situation. It is my hope that we can pass an enactment which will allow those aliens in the United States—nearly all of them upstanding, upright aliens, who have taken their places in society and are married and have children—to pay a fine in lieu of the head tax which they did not pay, and hold the receipt therefor for three years, after which time they may apply for first papers toward the process of citizenship, which would take another five years. That would mean all such persons would have to have been in the United States a minimum time of 13 years before they could possibly become citizens. I think a plan like that will perfect the house cleaning and will do away with the feelings we sometimes see of intolerance toward the alien and will do much for an era of good feeling and better understanding between all of the 117,000,000 people of the great United States.

I thank you. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. May the Chair inquire whether the gentleman from Texas desires to proceed now? There are three speeches in order this morning.

MR. GARNER of Texas. If it is desired, I will proceed now.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is recognized for 15 minutes. [Applause.]

THE MILLS BILL

MR. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, day before yesterday, so the papers report and information has come to me of a reliable character, there was held in the Capitol a conference composed of the Speaker of the House of Representatives [Mr. LONGWORTH], the majority leader [Mr. TILSON], the Secretary of the Treasury [Mr. MELLON], and Undersecretary of the Treasury [Mr. WINSTON], and Mr. OGDEN MILLS and the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee. The object, it appears, of that conference was to determine whether the statement I made concerning the Mellon bill being a steal was correct or not. The Secretary of the Treasury called these distinguished men together to determine, if he could, whether he had presented to the Congress of the United States a bill in which was contained a steal. Rather unique, rather unusual performance, I thought, that the author of the bill and the man who drew it could come before the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the majority leader, and the Republicans of the Ways and Means Committee solemnly to determine whether or not he had suggested to the Congress of the United States legislation in which there was contained theft. Now, I take the floor this morning for the purpose of trying to relieve his mind and the mind of those gentlemen, because we also learned that they were undetermined about it and could not determine whether there was in that piece of legislation any theft, and we are going to have a meeting of the Ways and Means Committee next Monday morning and have an investigation to determine whether the Secretary of the Treasury had suggested to Congress legislation in which there was contained theft.

I want to illustrate what I mean by theft in that bill, and I think I can use something personal. I take Mr. HAWLEY, for instance, who is now acting as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and always a fair target. Take the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] and myself, and see if I can illustrate to you gentlemen what I mean by theft in this bill. Mr. HAWLEY owes Mr. MILLS a dollar and HAWLEY is busted and in the hands of a receiver, as the Secretary of the Treasury says Germany was broke and went into the hands of a receiver, Mr. Dawes being the receiver. The Dawes plan was worked out. Now HAWLEY is busted. He owes OGDEN MILLS a dollar. OGDEN MILLS wants the dollar, and I have got a dollar—let us see if I have [laughter]. Jake, you hold that dollar, and if any Republicans start to come around here you let out a holler. [Laughter and applause.] I have got a dollar and HAWLEY owes it to OGDEN MILLS. OGDEN MILLS wants the dollar, but he can not get it. The Hawley creditors have arranged for HAWLEY to pay to OGDEN MILLS 5 cents each year on that dollar. OGDEN MILLS says that does not suit him. He says he wants the money now. So he says, "GARNER, you pay that dollar; you have got it; HAWLEY has not got the dollar, and I need it." I say that I do not want to pay the dollar. He says, "I know you have got the dollar and HAWLEY can pay you the dollar," so out with his guns and forces me to give it up. He takes it. I ask you, do you think that would be theft and robbery?

Mr. BLANTON. Highway robbery.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Under every statute of the country that would be highway robbery. Let us see what the situation is in this bill. No one claims—remember this; and I challenge a single man on the floor of the House to deny it—no one claims the American taxpayer owes for German damage to American citizens. Do you?

Do you? Does anybody claim that? If he does, I want him to rise. Not a single man will contend for a moment that the American taxpayer owes the corporation in which the gentleman from New York is a director a quarter of a million dollars by reason of German damages. Germany owes the corporation in which the gentleman from New York is a director in this instance in the place of HAWLEY; owes the corporation in which the gentleman from New York is a director a quarter of a million dollars. Germany has not got the money. It can not pay the corporation in which the gentleman from New York is a director but a thousand a year; the corporation in which the gentleman from New York is a director says, "I will not stand for that. I want the money now, and I know that Uncle Sam has got it, and I am going to make him pay it"—not by the six-shooter route, but by statute put on the books of this country to make the taxpayers of this country pay the bill that is owing to him by Germany.

Now, if that is not stealing by law, I do not know what it is. [Applause.] I never have attacked the equity of these claims, either the equity, the justice, or the legality of them, but I will do it before I get through. It is not necessary to attack them. It is not necessary for me to say that the judgment given in favor of the Standard Oil Co. for $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 is not a just judgment. It is sufficient for me to say I, as a taxpayer, do not owe it and you ought not to make me pay it.

Yet, you are proposing in this bill to take from the taxpayer for the purpose of paying the Standard Oil Co. and the Secretary of the Treasury a debt that he does not owe. Germany owes that debt. When you do that you will legalize the theft from the American taxpayers and you can not get away from it. That is what I mean by "theft." It is theft, legal theft, when you take from the taxpayers of the United States $250,000,000 and pay it to Andy Mellon and Morgan and others for debts due to them by Germany. That is theft by an act of Congress.

Oh, the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States are very much concerned about constructive suggestions.

They say that you ought not to criticize the administrative processes unless you have something constructive. It makes me think about what the two words mean according to the viewpoint of the person using them. Constructive legislation, ac-ording to Secretary Mellon, is where he gets some benefit out of it. [Applause.] Destructive legislation is where you prevent him from getting something out of the Treasury. [Applause.] That is the difference between constructive and destructive suggestions.

But I have suggested a method and I want some gentleman to criticize it when I get through. I say that the German people who own this property in this country, which property is now controlled by the Alien Property Custodian, can be relieved by Germany herself if she sees proper to do so.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Does the gentleman recall that the entire Democratic Party in 1923, under the leadership of Mr. RAYBURN, advocated the immediate return of that property, as property held in trust for the benefit of German citizens?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. No. The gentleman from New York may think his vote is the entire Democratic Party. I have examined that record. It is not the entire Democratic Party, if you will pardon me for saying so. You will find it so if you examine the Record.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. My colleague has not recommended, is not now recommending, nor at any time advocated the confiscation of this property?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I know. This property is in our hands, and Germany has agreed that we shall hold it until American claims are paid. That is correct. They now deny that, and deny that we have the right to liquidate it if we want to to pay these debts.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Did we not elect after the Berlin treaty to put our claims under the Dawes plan, and are we not bound by it now?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. No. The gentleman will pardon me. Congress has never taken any action on it at all; none whatever.

Now, I propose this: If you want the Germans' property returned to them, as I do, let us make arrangements to do it. Let Germany retain under the Dawes plan 45,000,000 marks, issue her bonds, with these marks to pay interest and create a sinking fund, and send them over here and we will deliver them to her nationals in settlement of their property. Does anybody object to that?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I do, for the purposes of the record.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Nobody ought to object to it, whether the gentleman does or not. But Secretary Mellon does not want to do that. He says in this morning's paper that he is afraid to do that, because he is afraid that the German bonds will depreciate in value and thereby you would be virtually confiscating this property.

Let us see what the provisions of this bill are. The provisions of this bill are to take this same promise to pay for security to us upon the $250,000,000 bonds.

Mr. STEVENSON. The American taxpayers.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes. The German citizens who own this property can not afford to take the same security that we are obligated to take. The American taxpayer must take the chance, but it would not do to have these German aliens take the chance, because it would be confiscation. It is not confiscation to take my property and apply it on the debt that I do not owe, but it would be confiscation to remit to Germany the 45,000,000 marks that she has agreed to pay in security for bonds to be issued to pay for the property already taken.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. The gentleman's suggestion is very much like the illustration he has made about the dollar of Mr. HAWLEY. You would take the property that belongs to these people. We are only holding it in trust now. You would take it and afford to them a German credit.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. It is German property, and the German Government deeded it to us. You say Germany did not have the right to deed it to us. You say that Germany did not have the right under the Berlin treaty to deed this property to us in exchange for the damage she has done our citizens. But she did do it. Now, I am willing for Germany to settle with her nationals. These gentlemen are so much concerned about all these people who live in Germany at the present time and whose property we hold; they are suffering on account of the fact that we are liable to do them an injustice, but they are not willing to take the same chances that American taxpayers are called upon to take when we issue bonds to the extent of $250,000,000 and the only security there is back of that issue is the promise to pay $11,000,000 a year, which will not equal the interest on the $250,000,000. But aside from that, let us see to whom I am going to pay it; and, gentlemen, you know this bill would not be here and this bill never would have been introduced if it had not been for the character of the people who are going to get the money. [Applause.] That is all there is to that.

President Coolidge commended Mr. MILLS very highly for his ethics. He said it was wonderful on Mr. MILLS's part. When he found out that this bill involved the payment of a quarter of a million dollars to his firm, Mr. MILLS got up on the floor of the House and said:

Gentlemen, I did not know my firm had an award, and I give notice to you now that I will have no more to do with this bill either in the committee or in the House.

A commendable thing and the President says it is a commendable thing, but it is different with the Secretary of the Treasury, who owns four times as much as OGDEN MILLS; it is all right for him to undertake to get his hands into the Treasury of the United States. [Applause.]

I merely wanted to point out the way they are going to get this money and how they were going to steal it so there would not be any more agonizing over it on the part of the leaders. That is the only thought I had, Mr. Speaker. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at this time the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] may have 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oregon may be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I wish to present some facts regarding the measure under discussion for the consideration of the gentlemen of the House and of the country.

A subcommittee was appointed by the Committee on Ways and Means, of which I happened to be chairman—I was not there when the action was taken—and another subcommittee was appointed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is chairman. The subcommittees consisted of 5 each, and we 10 persons held hearings over a period of about eight days, during which there was a record made. All members of this committee had brought before it, so far as I know, all the persons from whom testimony was desired, whether they were officials of the Government or private parties. At the conclusion of the testimony the subcommittees reported to their respective committees. Then the natural course of events followed, namely, the consideration of the bill was begun.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], who was quite an active member of our subcommittee, on the floor of the House the day following—that is, April 16—made a statement from which I read:

It is the most stupendous steal that has ever been suggested in American history.

Now, that was about the bill we are discussing.

It has four major provisions. One is to return the alien property now in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian to German nationals.

That is characterized as a stupendous steal.

The second is to pay mixed claims.

That is also stated to be a stupendous steal.

The third is to pay German nationals for damages that occurred by reason of our taking their property.

That is another of his specifications with reference to the "stupendous steal," and the fourth is for the issuance of $250,000,000 worth of bonds to meet the indebtedness, and that is the fourth indictment of the "stupendous steal."

That question having been raised by a responsible gentleman in this House, a leader of one party in the House, a member of the subcommittee that heard the testimony, and a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, which must pass upon the legislation, the question then was: What is the proper course to pursue in order to meet the proposition fairly and squarely and give the gentleman from Texas an opportunity to prove his charges and others interested the opportunity to reply? A conference was held by persons responsible for legislation in the country at this time, and it was decided that if questions were raised about the legitimacy of any legislation introduced or as to the honesty of intent and the facts in the case, the proper course to pursue—because all sound legislation is based upon adequate and reliable information and proper deductions made from that information—was to reopen the hearings and say to the gentleman from Texas and to any other person interested in getting information, "We will call before the Committee on Ways and Means any and all persons who may have information in order that we may prove to the country and to the Congress what the facts are," that the legislation is sound and ought to be passed, or it is not sound and ought not to be passed, since these charges of the gentleman from Texas were made after the hearings closed and cover questions not raised during the progress of the hearing.

But aside from that, I desire to discuss the legislation in brief. The Mixed Claims Commission provided for in that treaty was organized August 10, 1922, under the provisions of the Berlin treaty. Judge Edwin B. Parker, of Texas, was appointed as umpire. C. P. Anderson was the American commissioner; Doctor Kiesselbach the German commissioner; Robert W. Bonyne, a former Member of this House, the American agent; and Dr. Karl von Lewinski the German agent.

The action of the Mixed Claims Commission was one of the matters attacked by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] in the omnibus indictment which I read at the beginning. The limit of time for filing these claims was April, 1923. All claims went to the Secretary of State and many had already been made before the Mixed Claims Commission was organized.

At expiration of date of filing of claims there had been presented claims to the number of 12,416, aggregating in amount to $1,479,000,000; 1,290 claims were withdrawn, aggregating $142,608,000; 6,827 claims were dismissed, aggregating $482,743,000; 1,057 claims are pending, not acted on, amounting to $81,933,000; 2,172 awards were made to March 31, 1926, aggregating $184,096,000.

There are still pending a number of claims, and Mr. Bonyne said before our committee that the total amount of awards would aggregate, with accrued interest, not over $190,000,000—between $180,000,000 and $190,000,000. The accuracy of these findings has been called into question because it has been so stated. The statement that the bill is a stupendous steal has gone out to the country. From questions asked by Members of this House who heard the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], they think the whole bill is wrong and the findings are wrong, and the press of the country, unwittingly in all probability, has spread this idea.

It has been stated that the insurance companies and the shipping companies have no claims at all, and it has been stated by Members of this House that they ought not to have any awards at all because their so-called losses were based on risks taken by them when they insured vessels at advanced premiums or when they accepted cargoes on the vessels at advanced rates. So these awards of the Mixed Claims Commission are called into question as being steals either against the United States or against Germany, any disclaimers to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Is it not a fact that by far the largest creditor before the Mixed Claims Commission is the United States itself, with a claim for about $35,000,000?

Mr. HAWLEY. Sixty million dollars for losses.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. On behalf of the Shipping Board and the War Risk Insurance Bureau.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes. I am informed that the amount for the former is about $34,000,000 and for the latter is about $16,000,000. Yet these claims of our Government are called a "stupendous steal."

Mr. JACOBSTEIN and Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Were not the insurance company claims in the Alabama claim disallowed by the Congress?

Mr. HAWLEY. I could not answer that offhand.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. That is the precedent.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would the gentleman extend the same measure of damages to an insurance company he would to a direct loser?

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not go into the side issues now. The gentleman must appreciate that in 15 minutes I can only make a general statement.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. May I say in connection with the interruption of the gentleman from New York that in the French spoliation claims the insurance claims were allowed and allowed by a judgment of the Court of Claims of the United States.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield so that I may ask a relevant question?

Mr. HAWLEY. I yield to the gentleman, although I can not yield too often, because I have only 15 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is the gentleman in favor of the bill as submitted to the committee by the Treasury Department?

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman knows that question is hardly proper to submit to a Member who must sit on the committee that prepares the legislation. I have not gone through the bill with the idea of legislating on the matter yet, and I could not say in advance what a final conclusion might be.

Mr. RAYBURN. I thought the gentleman took the floor to defend the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman will see for what purpose I took the floor if I may be allowed to proceed.

The Government's claim, as already stated, amounts to about $60,000,000 exclusive of the occupation claims. The occupation claims are $255,000,000, and those claims have been paid by Germany. They were paid under the Versailles treaty to the Reparations Commission and the commission kept the money. The commission advised the United States to make a second claim and the United States did. That claim has been paid once ahead of the private American claims, and the Government has the money or ought to have the money. It was paid to the agency which was to collect the money. Now the Government is coming in a second time ahead of the American claims on the same debtor to have its claim paid twice. I would like for that thought to be retained.

On April 1, 1926, the total awards, including interest to date $32,000,000 on private awards and approximately $15,000,000 on Government awards, amounted to $181,000,000.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield there for a question? Is the gentleman quite sure he is correct that the claims of the army of occupation have actually been paid and covered into the Treasury?

Mr. HAWLEY. It was so stated in the hearings, and I asked the Undersecretary whether that was the case and he said it was.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. To whom were they paid?

Mr. HAWLEY. To the Reparations Commission, I understand.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The United States Government has not received it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Let it be understood that it was never received in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. I said that.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And the taxpayers may not get any benefit out of it, because you might give it to somebody else like you propose to do under this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, gentlemen, listen to this. Germany, if I am correctly informed, immediately after the close of the war returned the property of American nationals which she had taken. She at least kept the treaty we had with her prior to the time of the organization of the United States as a separate Government and did not regard that treaty as a scrap of paper. The total amount of property of alien Germans taken during the war was $578,735,000.

It is advocated in this country now that we confiscate the property of German nationals seized during the war.

The great paper, the New York Herald, of April 19 had an editorial advocating that, and it is being advocated elsewhere, and, I think, on this very floor in this Chamber.

Mr. CROWTHER. If the gentleman will yield, the commission only allowed 12½ per cent of the total claims submitted.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. The only advocate I heard in 1923 was from a prominent leader on the Republican side.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think that is not germane to my discussion. No matter by whom it was made, it is a statement not confined to any one person. Under the Winslow Act we recognized the right of the German aliens to this their property. We returned all the property of every person whose claim was less than $10,000. We returned $10,000 on every other claim. Since that date we have been accounting for interest earned on the property and for rentals accruing on the property. We have recognized by law their right to their property. There is remaining in the Treasury to-day $183,890,000 in money paid into the Treasury by the Alien Property Custodian, and $90,740,000 property still in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian. There is yet to be settled for ships, radio stations, patents seized and yet undisposed of, and for the use of patents seized, and these claims are limited to not exceed $100,000,000, and probably will be settled for far less than $75,000,000.

The total claims of the United States and her nationals against Germany is $505,000,000, and the total property taken from alien Germans and still in our possession is less than $375,000,000. So if we are to retain the property so seized and use it to pay the claims of the United States and the American claimants, there will be $130,000,000 yet unsettled.

The national honor is involved in this matter. Before we were a country, before we were a nation, our people took the position that private property of private citizens on land was not subject to confiscation by the enemy in time of war. Since that day we have lived up to that honorable principle. Germany has kept her side of the bargain in this instance. It is true that Great Britain, France, and Italy confiscated the property of the German nationals within their boundaries, but we are not bound to follow a bad example. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. American citizens can not present their claims to foreign countries. They must be presented by our State Department. Their claims are collected by our Government. They have no recourse in law. They can not sue a foreign country for the return of property even after an award has been made. They must depend on their Government for the collection of this money.

You remember that was the rule in the French spoliation claims. France agreed as the result of depredations on American commerce to settle for losses suffered by our nationals. Part of this was paid in money to our Government and part of the payments were assumed by the United States in offset against claims presented by France. After about 100 years Congress paid a part that remained unpaid, totaling $3,910,000. President Taft, on December 6, 1910, said:

I invite the attention of Congress to the great number of claims which, at the instance of Congress, have been considered by the Court of Claims in the matter of the French spoliation cases.

There are pending now some $3,250,000 of unpaid claims. Sixty-nine reports have been made to Congress on these claims since they have been pending, 63 of which were favorable. Do you wish now the Government of the United States to collect this money for our American nationals, to put it in the Treasury, so that it can only be taken out by appropriation by Congress?

Mr. BOX. What authority has the gentleman for saying that the money for the French spoliation claims, now pending and which have been pending for more than 100 years, was put in the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. HAWLEY. Because that is the fact, as stated above.

Mr. BOX. I wish the gentleman would point to some official record showing that fact. I challenge the statement.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman can satisfy himself. I was a member of the Claims Committee of this House for six years, and I reported a bill for the payment of some of these claims, and we had the evidence before us.

Mr. BOX. I challenge the statement that there is a dollar in the Treasury of the United States paid by France for the French spoliation claims, to which the gentleman refers. The gentleman from Texas is a member of the Committee on Claims and has given considerable attention to the question. He risks his reputation, such as it is, on the correctness of the statement he makes now, denying that the United States collected money for these claimants and has withheld it from them.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have made investigation of these claims and think the statement above is a correct summary. The question is long and involved and a complete statement would take a great deal more time than is at my disposal.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. May I inquire—

Mr. HAWLEY. I regret I can not yield. I wish to complete the statement. Under the treaty of Berlin the Government of the United States received 100,000,000 gold marks a year, of which 45,000,000 is to be paid to the American claimants to settle these claims and 55,000,000 to the settlement of claims of the Government of the United States. Under that treaty the property of German aliens still in the possession of the Government of the United States shall be held as security for the payment of American claims. Now, if we devote 45,000,000 gold marks, $10,710,000 of our money, to the extinguishment of claims of American citizens, amounting to $190,000,000, it will be 80 years before they are paid, and we will hold the German property—at least it will not be all liquidated—for the same period of 80 years.

Now, if the Government of the United States—I am explaining the terms of the bill, not expressing an opinion—pays the claims of American citizens out of the Treasury, and then collects from Germany, at the rate of 100,000,000 gold marks per year it will collect from Germany under this arrangement the total amount so paid American claimants in seven and a half years.

In our treaties with Prussia in 1785, 1797, and 1828 it was agreed that the property of merchants, shipowners, farmers, and some other specified classes should not be confiscated by an enemy in time of war. Our country has steadfastly contended for this principle and has led in the movements that culminated in exempting the property of alien enemies on land from confiscation. Now, to confiscate the property of alien Germans would be to turn back the clock of international progress a hundred years, and in the event of another war justify wholesale confiscations. Our country to-day is at the head of the world—the great outstanding advocate of the sacredness of treaties and the conservator of progress.

The Constitution of the United States says that private property can not be taken except for public use and for a just recompense. It does not protect the property of citizens only, but all property of all persons under the flag. It seems that without question the United States Supreme Court would not uphold confiscation, especially since Congress has recognized the right of alien Germans by returning all property where the value was less than $10,000, made payment to all others of $10,000, and has provided that there be paid to the owners to whom full restitution is not yet made the interest, rents, or other accruals on the property still held.

Is it a stupendous crime to uphold the honor of our country, its Constitution, and the solemn agreements made with other nations?

I will comment briefly on one other provision of the bill. There is not opportunity to present them all.

Under the Berlin treaty the alien German property is, in substance, to be held as security for the payment of American claims. The Government assumes the making of collections from Germany; that is, it assumes a trusteeship for the American claimants. If, as such trustee, it returns the alien property to its owners, it disposes of the property held in trust as security for the payment of American claimants. Where a trustee disposes of property held in trust as security for the payment of claims, he becomes liable for the payment of such claims.

The bill proposes to carry out our treaty obligations by returning the alien property, and that the United States recognize its trusteeship and assume responsibility for the American claims for which the property so returned was security. This is to avoid the alternative that the American claimants wait during a period of 80 years for the liquidation of their claims, and the alien Germans a like period for the full return of their property. And is not a delay of 80 years a practical confiscation of the American claimants and the German nationals?

I thank the House for its indulgence. I thought that some outline of the provisions of a bill and the principles upon which it was drawn, against which the charge of a most stupendous steal has been made, should be made. It is a great subject to attempt to discuss briefly.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE NEXT SUNDAY

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] to preside on next Sunday at the memorial services on the life, character, and public services of the late Hon. ARTHUR B. WILLIAMS.

WORLD WAR VETERANS LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my remarks I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Veterans' Legislation, during the rest of the session, be permitted to meet while the House is in session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the rest of the session that the Committee on Veterans' Legislation may be permitted to sit during the session of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what legislation has the gentleman's committee so important as to justify sitting during the sessions of the House, thereby keeping the Members off the floor? We need the members of all these committees on the floor during the sessions of the House in order to be sure of keeping a quorum during the rest of this session.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. This is not to be taken out of my time?

Mr. TILSON. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would be glad to reply to the gentleman. Personally, the chairman was not in favor of it, but was voted down by his committee, and he was instructed to ask for that permission because there are two bills affecting guardianship matters before that committee.

Mr. TILSON. If there is some urgent matter pending the gentleman ought to be willing to state it, but it seems to me, on general principles, we ought not to give committees the right to sit during the sessions of the House, thereby keeping Members off the floor.

Mr. BULWINKLE. If the gentleman will permit, this is a matter, according to the chairman of the committee, of some legislation that ought to be passed at this session of Congress. Now, we are having these hearings as to this legislation.

Mr. TILSON. Can not the committee hold its hearings in the morning like the other committees?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No, sir; because a great many of the witnesses are being brought here.

Mr. TILSON. Could not the gentleman limit his request to a single week? I do not think that any more committees ought to be given permission to sit during sessions of the House at this stage of the session.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman object to having that permission for one week?

Mr. TILSON. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I make the request for one week only.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that for a week the Committee on Veterans' Legislation be permitted to sit during the session of the House—

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Commencing to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, when the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation was organized in 1924 it reported to this House and secured the passage of the veterans act of 1924 and its amendment of 1925 and on March 11 of this year reported to the House House bill 10240, which would further amend the veterans act of 1924. It would affect the lives and fortunes of approximately 30,000 disabled men in the United States. As originally agreed to by the committee, this bill would have carried approximately $42,000,000 per year. Because of the condition of the Treasury the committee reduced that amount, as carried by the bill, to $21,168,000 for the first year and $26,483,900 for the second year. Now the chairman of that committee and the committee recognized something of the condition of the Treasury. There have been reported to this House by committees requests for appropriations of approximately $350,000,000 when there is but $15,000,000, approximately, that can be expended this year if sufficient surplus is to be carried over for the year 1927. As so well called to the attention of the House by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] at the time of the passage of the tax bill, we would not be in this situation if the House by its vote had not agreed to donate to the heirs of six great estates in the United States the sum of $85,000,000. We could have taken care of, without any difficulty, the soldiers of the Civil War, the Spanish War, and the soldiers of this war, the retirement legislation, and many other matters had it not been for the combination and agreement which was made in Congress but not advocated by the President of the United States or by the Secretary of the Treasury.

That was my reason for voting against the conference report when it was brought before this House, recognizing the fact that to-day we would meet this situation. If the bill had been sent back to the conferees and not agreed to and if that $85,000,000 donation had not been made to the heirs of these six great estates, we would be in shape to take care of the veterans of all wars and others who should be taken care of.

But, Mr. Speaker, the reason I rose to-day is to recall a promise, which the committee made to the House in 1924 and in 1925. I respectfully requested the minority leader of the House [Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee] to be present to-day—

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. He was here a few seconds ago.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Fifteen minutes ago I requested a page to see if he were in the Chamber, so as to make sure he would be present. It was because I had made a certain promise to him as minority leader, and a promise to the House, in conversation between us on the floor of the House, that when this next bill for the relief of disabled veterans of the World War came before the House we would throw that bill directly on the floor of the House for action under the rules of the House.

This bill was reported on March 11, and since then it has been on the calendar, and a rule has been requested from the Rules Committee, but the chairman of our committee has been unable to get any action either from the Committee on Rules or from the House. If this situation continues a short time longer, then it will be apparent that the chairman of this Veterans' Committee will be requested to refer this bill back to the Veterans' Committee to do violence to it in different ways, bring it to the House for action, and then bring it up under suspension of the rules, so that there would be no chance to amend it or to discuss it, and Members will be forced to vote for it or against it in that form.

I was opposed to that procedure in 1924, was against it in 1925, and I am opposed to it now, because it is time that this House decided itself what it wanted to do with this legislation affecting veterans. If this House has not sense enough and judgment enough to recognize the condition of the Treasury and pass a bill that we can pay for, people might say we would be justified in bringing it up under suspension of the rules. Of course, we know there are no demagogues here, and if there were a demagogue here he would try to load on this bill a great many things that ought not to go on it, things that would make it practically impossible for the President to sign it. In that case they ought to take the responsibility. But it is time the House itself took the responsibility of deciding what ought to be done.

I would like to secure, if possible, some statement from the leaders, if there are any of them here, as to what is contemplated, whether they expect me to bring it up under suspension of the rules, or what is to be done.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Has the gentleman appeared before the Rules Committee and asked that this bill be brought out?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman has requested a hearing before the Rules Committee and as yet has not secured it.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman tell us on what date this bill was reported out?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It was reported out on March 11, 1926.

Mr. CONNERY. And the gentleman has tried to get a hearing before the Rules Committee and has been unable to do so?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. He has not only tried, but he is trying again.

Mr. CONNERY. It is over six weeks ago since the bill was reported in?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. They were willing to cut the surtaxes of the multimillionaires, but when you asked fifteen or twenty million dollars for the disabled veterans they would not do it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I think it was a vote of this House that gave those six great estates that donation. It was not the steering committee or the Committee on Rules, but the House.

Mr. CONNERY. Does the gentleman think that the Treasury of the United States is in such condition that $21,000,000 would bankrupt the country?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. No. Three hundred and fifty million dollars has been recommended to this House now, and the people behind those measures are pushing for action.

Mr. RANKIN. Regardless of the conference report, under the Mellon-Mills bill passed at the beginning of this Congress we would have had a deficit, would we not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would not say that, but I would say that we would have had $100,000,000 for expenditure on other things if that action had not been taken.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman says he has a rule pending for the consideration of this veterans' legislation. The members of the Committee on Rules have a great many inquiries and requests with reference to this legislation. I am sure all of them have. I know I have. The gentleman has stated that he has endeavored to get a hearing for his rule. With whom did the gentleman take up that request?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. As the gentleman from Alabama well knows, as I served with him many years on the Committee on Rules, I went to the chairman and requested a hearing?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did the gentleman take this up with the steering committee of the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes. The gentleman has appeared before the steering committee advocating this legislation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then it would be proper and within the record to state that we can not secure action before the Rules Committee as to this legislation because they have not yet received instructions from the steering committee as a matter of party policy?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do not think that would be a correct statement, but inasmuch as this House has given $85,000,000 to these six big estates I have tried to work out some scheme of using the little $15,000,000 that is left for disabled veterans.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from South Dakota called attention to the fact that he invited the minority leader to be present and said later that he wanted to appeal to the leader of this House in behalf of this legislation. Did he also invite the majority leader, who really leads the action of this House, to be present?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that a few moments ago the chairman of the Veterans' Committee was talking to the majority leader, but it seems there do not seem to be very many leaders present in the House at this time.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the gentleman really wants action, should he not have advised the real leader to be here and propounded his inquiry to him rather than to try to lay the responsibility on the minority leader?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman misunderstood me. The only reason I wanted the minority leader to be here was because I made him a promise two years ago, and I wanted to say to him that if this condition continued it would be necessary for me to break my promise. My object was to continue our conversation and understanding of 1924 and 1925, when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asked that this legislation be considered under the general rules of the House. I told him it would be, and I wanted to assure him I have not changed my attitude.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman served for a good many years on the Rules Committee, and he knows all the intricacies, bypaths, and highways of procedure in this House. He knows how, if he wants the bill gotten up, to get the bill up before the House. Why does not the gentleman go before the Rules Committee again, and why does he not go before the steering committee again, and why does not the gentleman now call on the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] to indicate what they propose to do about this legislation, rather than to put his appeal in the Record, where none of them will see it, and, if they do see it, where they will pay no heed to it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I think that is a rather violent assumption on the part of the gentleman from Texas, because I imagine the leaders of this House, or most of them, at least, go over the Record very carefully, and I think they will now realize fully the situation that this Veterans' Committee is in and I rather anticipate that some decision will be arrived at in a short time and that the steering committee and the Rules Committee will say what bills are to come before the House and what bills are not to come before the House.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why does not the gentleman now ask unanimous consent for a day certain in the future for the consideration of the veterans' legislation so that the matter may be put up to the House and it can be shown who objects to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that the chairman of this committee, recognizing the rules of this House quite well and knowing that the majority leader and the minority leader are both absent from the floor, is not going to make such a request, but he will serve notice that if some action is not taken, he will seek recognition in the House to prefer such a request.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman understand just what there is about legislation that would benefit the veterans that makes the chairman of the Rules Committee so prejudiced against it? The chairman of the Rules Committee has not voted on his resolution and I have had one there for a month and he will not give any action on it. Why is the chairman of the Rules Committee so prejudiced against veterans' legislation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. My judgment is, I will say to the gentleman—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes in order to answer that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that I doubt if the chairman of the Rules Committee is prejudiced against that legislation, but he wants to go over this question of how much money we have to spend, recognizing we have only $15,000,000 when we ought to have $100,000,000, and after he has done that he will take action within a short time. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I requested this time in order to impress upon the membership of the House, if I can, the perilous situation of any relief for veterans at this session of Congress. I also wanted to conduct an old-fashioned experience meeting if I could get the majority leader here and find out just what his attitude is since the last question I asked him on April 6 last, when he said that the matter was being given very careful consideration.

Now, may I ask the chairman of the committee who it is that is demanding this bill go back to our committee for consideration?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that that demand has not yet come, but that the delay we are meeting in connection with this legislation is certainly the same thing we experienced in 1924 and 1925, and knowing that the House is going to adjourn within a short time, I know that is the procedure which will have to be taken or there will not be any legislation, and then we will have the bill considered under suspension of the rules and no opportunity to discuss it or consider it in the House.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman tell me whether there are any members of the Republican steering committee present?

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] is present.

Mr. BLANTON. There is one in the chair, the main generalissimo.

Mr. HUDSPETH. No; he is not. The gentleman from Kansas is also an important member of that committee.

Mr. BROWNING. I do not want to be too insistent, but I wonder whether the gentleman from Kansas will be good enough to tell us what chance we have of getting action through his committee for the early consideration of this veterans' legislation?

Mr. TINCHER. The only time it was ever brought up when I was present it appeared to me the matter could be worked out in the very near future. Quite lately I have been very busy on the Agricultural Committee, and I do not know whether the steering committee met this morning or not. However, I think there is a chance for your legislation coming up. That was my impression the only time I heard it discussed by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. BROWNING. Now, of course, a bugaboo has been raised about this being an increase of appropriations. I want the House to distinctly understand that this is not an increase of appropriations. For the fiscal year ending in 1926 the entire appropriation carrying legislation and benefits for the disabled veterans amounted to $343,000,000; $38,000,000 of that is for vocational training.

Under the present law a little over $4,000,000 will be used for vocational training next year, and you will have a decrease of $34,000,000 there, and after the passage of this bill, if the House should accept it, there would be nothing like the expense to the Government as the one they are bearing this year for the Veterans' Bureau. If retrenchments are to be made I certainly do not think the Congress should make them at the expense of those who made the greatest measure of sacrifice in their devotion to their country's cause. I do not believe the Congress wants the disabled man to understand they are willing to do that, and I want some one who is holding up the consideration of this bill to tell me what feature of the bill he objects to. I would like for some one to tell me what particular provision in this bill which the committee has considered and has passed upon he objects to.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], the chairman of the committee, intimated that there was pressure brought to have the bill referred back to the committee to cut out certain phases. Possibly he could tell you what reductions they want made, and who wants them made.

Mr. BROWNING. May I have the attention of the chairman of the committee? I understood from his statement there was pressure being brought to send this bill back to the committee for the purpose of mutilating it. May I ask him what provision in this bill anyone is objecting to?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman there is not the greatest harmony among the different

Members of the House as to this bill, and each one who wants to send it back wants to cut out the particular thing he does not agree with; and as I have discussed it on both sides of the House there will be first one man who wants to cut out vocational training or another man who objects to the misconduct and then another with respect to the medical corps provision, each one having a different one, and if we met the sum total of their objections there would not be anything left of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know of a single Democrat who is trying to mutilate this bill?

Mr. BROWNING. I have not had any complaints from my side of the aisle, I will say to the gentleman, frankly; but, of course, I have not had any occasion to converse with those on the Republican side of the House. I wonder if the Members on the gentleman's side of the House who are objecting to these features have read the hearings on this proposed legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would say to the gentleman, as the gentleman himself well knows, we had six or seven weeks of hearings and I question if anyone has read the hearings except those of us who went through them.

Mr. BROWNING. If the Republican leaders are not willing to risk the Democrats on this committee because we happen to be ex-service men, except the gentleman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], and if they are not willing to risk the judgment of the chairman of the committee, whom they have appointed, because he happens to be an ex-service man, I wonder if they are not willing to trust the mature and the conservative judgment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], who approves this legislation and who has given it very thorough and considerate attention while it was being formed; or I wonder if they are not willing to trust the very sound and considerate and impartial judgment of the gentleman from New Jersey who sits next to Mr. LUCE [Mr. PERKINS]; or I wonder if they are not willing to risk the fair judgment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWEET], who has been very attentive in the consideration of this bill; or I wonder if they are not willing to trust the fine and discriminating and sound judgment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] who sits on this committee. [Applause.] None of these are ex-service men.

I do not know whom to talk to about this, because I can not find anyone who knows anything about why we can not get this bill considered.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman remembers that when the so-called bonus bill or the adjusted compensation bill was up and was rushed through with 40 minutes of debate under suspension of the rules—the gentleman remembers at that time we received many telegrams from brokers in New York and from big business concerns asking us to vote against that bill, because they favored everything for the disabled but nothing for the able-bodied. Does the gentleman know of any member of the committee who has received any telegrams from New York asking that we do everything we can for the disabled now?

Mr. BROWNING. If so, they have not let it be known.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BROWNING. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell the gentleman how to locate objectors. If the gentleman will just ask unanimous consent now that next Tuesday may be set apart for this veterans' legislation, we can bring the matter to a showdown, and I hope the gentleman will make that request.

Mr. BROWNING. Well, that is a very good suggestion. I do not like to take advantage of the majority leader, but I wonder if he left anyone here to represent him.

Mr. BLANTON. We will locate where the objection comes from.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I ask—

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I have no interest in this whatever, I know nothing about it; but if this is a threat, I am willing to stand here and object to any change in the methods of carrying on the business of the House and will take full responsibility.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, we have located one, and I would put him on record. I would make the request and put him on record.

Mr. BROWNING. I am not criticizing any gentleman for his position, and of course, if objection is going to be made, there is no use of my making the request, but there is an additional reason—

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield to me to make the request?

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. In view of the fact the House gave the gentleman unanimous consent to address the House, does the gentleman think he ought to yield his time for a proceeding of this kind at this time? Does the gentleman think that would be keeping good faith with the rest of the House, who gave the gentleman this permission?

Mr. UNDERHILL. If my colleague wants to put me in an embarrassing position, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. BROWNING. I did not intend to do that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If my colleague will permit, since the House was very fair in giving us both this unanimous consent, would it not be better if the gentleman from Tennessee and I served notice that on Monday we would request unanimous consent that this bill be taken up if we could secure recognition for that purpose?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Why wait until Monday? Why not do it to-day?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is simply a matter of fairness in view of the courtesy that has been extended to both of us.

Mr. BROWNING. To be frank with the House, I do not think we would be justified in saying that anyone who objects to this procedure is opposed to the legislation, and it is certainly not my intention to put anybody in a bad light.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me for the purpose of making the request?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, veterans' legislation coming from the Veterans' Committee shall be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DARROW). The present occupant of the chair will ask the gentleman whether he has consulted with the majority leader?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not have to consult anybody in order to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BROWNING. I do not want to do anything that would be construed as a discourtesy.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask the Speaker to put the question—the gentleman from Tennessee has yielded to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take the responsibility and put the gentleman's request. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that on next Tuesday after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table legislation from the Veterans' Committee may be in order?

Mr. LEHLBACH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Has not the Speaker a perfect right to decline to entertain a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is true.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Has the Chair refused to entertain the request?

Mr. BLANTON. No; the Chair has put it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. BLANTON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman can not take me off the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. Regular order takes the gentleman off the floor.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman is trying to intimidate the House, and I refused to be intimidated.

Mr. BROWNING. I hope the Members of the House will not let this prejudice the consideration of this measure.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. It is the purpose of the committee and every member of the committee to bring this up, so that the whole House can consider it like it considers other legislation. We believe it is the right way to consider this particular measure. Is not that true?

Mr. BROWNING. I think it ought to be so considered. I think its dignity should command the attention of the House.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman from Texas is indulging in his usual tactics, but I want to say that my objection is based entirely on friendliness toward the bill, to aid the injured and the crippled, to those who have served their country. My objection is not in opposition to the bill, but in opposition to the methods of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Massachusetts reminds me of the passage where Job says, "O Lord, deliver me from mine comforters."

Mr. BROWNING. Now, Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further. There is one reason why this legislation ought to have consideration. This is a general legislation bill from the World War Veterans' Committee. The condition has arisen whereby I think it is absolutely imperative that we correct evils existing in the District of Columbia with regard to guardianship matters. A provision can be placed on this bill if we are given the chance to consider it that will remedy that situation.

I want to sound a warning that a law that gives discretionary power to the director to take over guardianship of 40,000 cases will not answer the purpose for which we are striving. Under the present arrangement the Director of the Veterans' Bureau has a right to stop the payment to the guardian in the cases of wards of his bureau in certain cases.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Is it not a fact that the Veterans' Bureau Committee meets this afternoon at half past 2?

Mr. BROWNING. I so understand it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. DENISON. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman occupy the five minutes or yield to some one else?

Mr. BROWNING. I would rather have it myself, though I do not want to be discourteous.

Mr. DENISON. I will not object if the gentleman is going to take the time himself, but I will object if he is going to yield.

Mr. BROWNING. I am not going to decline to yield; if the gentleman wants to object he can do it.

Mr. DENISON. I object.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from Illinois can not couple his objection with a condition.

Mr. DENISON. I do not object to the gentleman speaking himself, but I did object to his yielding to others.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman must make a straight objection and not couple it with a condition, according to the ruling of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 15 minutes.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, as I stated this morning when asking for time in which to speak, I was informed by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] several days ago that he desired the remarks of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Burke, before the Indian Affairs Committee be inserted in the Record. Mr. Burke spoke the other day for nearly three hours without interruption before the committee and without objection from any member. He now desires to place his remarks in the Record. To that I have no objection, even though they reflect upon me in part. I do desire, however, to make a brief statement, and I told Judge WILLIAMSON, who asked to put the remarks in the Record, that I would make a statement at this time in connection with the remarks he wanted to have inserted.

I made objection to this Indian Bureau system and to the right of any bureau to pass upon proposed legislation.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I want to get along. Yes; briefly.

Mr. LEAVITT. Is it not true that the gentleman himself introduced one bill that was referred to the bureau, and it was ascertained that practically everything that was contained in it was the enactment of legislation in other laws which had been passed?

Mr. FREAR. That was true; but that was a small private claim, and the only one I introduced.

Mr. LEAVITT. Would not that illustrate the value of referring bills to the bureau that is handling these matters through years of legislation for their comment as to its value and necessity?

Mr. FREAR. I think it is very desirable to get any information at any time, but there is no necessity for so doing, nor do I think we should be influenced by their judgment. Now, I must get along.

I made certain charges against the Indian Bureau, not individually but due to bureau management which I submit is not in the interest of the Indians. I have made the charges plain and distinct. It is a big problem, but there should be an entire change in the system, which I submit has outlived its usefulness. I pointed out very objectionable practices and I asked for an investigation. The Indian Commissioner has appeared and has made his long statement in response, and that stands for what it is worth. I am offering to present at this time what I believe is practically indisputable testimony fortifying every statement I have made which I wish to present before the committee that would have a hearing on this investigation.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I will; certainly.

Mr. LEAVITT. To which committee does the gentleman refer?

Mr. FREAR. I am referring now to the Committee on Rules. But I wish to make this further statement at the outset: There was a resentful spirit shown by some of my colleagues on the committee who did not understand my purpose or what I intended and I desire briefly to make a statement of the position of myself in regard to the committee at this time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a comment?

Mr. FREAR. I will yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course, I can not speak for the gentleman's colleagues on the Committee on Indian Affairs, but opposition to the gentleman's discussion at various times might very well not be based upon anything personal and I am sure it will not be. But I received a letter this morning—

Mr. FREAR. I have only a few minutes, and I desire to cover some matters, but I yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. It will be very brief. I received a letter this morning from a public-spirited woman doing very good work among the Indians, who stated that a very disastrous effect upon the situation in these reservations was being caused by certain speeches of the gentleman from Wisconsin, going so far as he did in his charges. It occurs to me very probably those who are interested in good administration might take some exceptions to the gentleman's discussion without being in any way personal.

Mr. FREAR. I thank the gentleman for his statement. Let me say in response I have received literally hundreds of letters commending my efforts. I sent no speeches to these various reservations, but I have received a great many letters from State governors and others, some of whom are familiar with the facts in regard to the administration of the bureau, and they have commended—

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman has not sent any speeches, how did they circulate on the reservations?

Mr. FREAR. I will discuss that later. Others may have done so if they deemed the speeches had merit.

We do not want to do an unjust thing; we do not want to do any act that is unfair. The Indian judge bill, proposed by the Indian Bureau without permitting the Indian to have a right to a trial by jury, without permitting appeal—all those things I have tried to set forth in past speeches. I have denounced the Indian oil leasing bill as approved by the Indian Bureau. I have not charged any official with misuse of funds, or charged that anyone has taken any undue advantage, excepting where specific facts have been presented.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman from Wisconsin does not mean to give the impression that the Indian court bill has passed, does he?

Mr. FREAR. No. Those were objections I have made to it in my speeches. The oil bill has not passed, either.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to go into details, because in the time allotted I can not do that, and I desire to yield to anyone who desires to inquire. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks, and if that is given I will make a further request. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my own remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in my remarks, about a couple of pages of the Record, covering an analysis of the Indian judge bill and of the oil bill made by Mr. Collier, who is secretary of the Indian Defense Bureau. In the three-hour discussion by Mr. Burke before the committee, which was uninterrupted, Mr. Burke assailed Mr. Collier in a way that was unfair; at least, it ought to have entitled him to an answer. Mr. Collier was refused by a tie vote permission to be heard. Now comes the right of Mr. Collier to be heard in all fairness in the analyses of these two bills, which I ask unanimous consent to put in the Record.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have had some contact with the very difficult problem that confronts the Bureau of Indian Affairs. I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment that bureau has never been headed by a man of more capacity and integrity and ability than Mr. Burke. The difficulties of his position are tremendously increased by the flood of articles and charges that are made throughout the country by officers of alleged Indian associations.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, this is not to be taken out of my time.

Mr. CRAMTON. No. I am reserving the right to object. The gentleman made quite a statement in behalf of his request, and I merely want to explain the reason for my objection. Those statements when scattered through the country have a certain harmful effect, but if they are inserted in the records of Congress and are sponsored by a gentleman so distinguished as the gentleman from Wisconsin and are then circulated throughout the country, they have a tremendously bad effect. They injure administration. I have my own opinion as to the value of a statement by Mr. Collier, and therefore I object.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I will say this, because it is presented against a single objection: Mr. Collier represents the American Indian Defense Association. He has offered to place all their books before Congress. He, more than anybody else, helped to expose some of the bills I have opposed here. He has a clear understanding, in my judgment, of these bills. He was assailed by Mr. Burke during the three hours' speech and asked for the right to respond, but that right was not given to him. Under those circumstances I insist that in all fairness to a man who represents this great organization—that has some of the best men and women in the United States connected with it—that this man who has lived among the Indians, and who has no motive for misrepresenting conditions, should have the right to that small privilege. I trust the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman ought not to continue his appeal. I do not alter my former opinion; but since the gentleman presses the matter, I will ask the gentleman if this gentleman referred to does not make his living out of his job?

Mr. FREAR. Yes he is the secretary. The entire expenses of his organization do not exceed $15,000. His own salary is contributed by four people, who pay his entire salary, according to a statement submitted to the committee. Anyone who is willing to give his time, a man of his ability, to work of this kind, who has lived among the Indians, it seems to me ought to be heard after he has been assailed in the manner I have described by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. That is all I ask, that he be given the opportunity to be heard.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes, certainly.

Mr. LEAVITT. Does not the gentleman realize that his own resolution in regard to the situation is now pending before the Committee on Rules, and that Mr. Collier can present his charges to that committee, and he is not barred from having his day in court?

Mr. FREAR. Yes. But while statements of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are being circulated—and he has a right without question to be heard—Mr. Collier has no way of answering, and he stands, as he believes, representative of this Indian defense organization in an unofficial way.

Mr. LEAVITT. Is it not true that the gentleman himself, under an extension of remarks, speaking for 10 minutes, included at that time statements that included charges by Mr. Collier, and attacked the commissioner first?

Mr. FREAR. I included a letter signed by Mr. Collier in the Navajo bridge case.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute longer to answer the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Is it not a fact that some 12,000 copies of these speeches have been circulated throughout the United States?

Mr. FREAR. There are three speeches that I have made, and that number may have been circulated.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. And of that number how many did Mr. Collier send out?

Mr. FREAR. I do not know, but undoubtedly he sent some of them.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does not the gentleman think it is fair to state that at the conclusion of Commissioner Burke's statement the gentleman was given every opportunity to cross-examine him with reference to every detail contained in that statement and that the gentleman did not avail himself of that opportunity?

Mr. FREAR. I did not want to refer to that, but I am glad the gentleman has opened the door. The commissioner spoke for nearly three hours, without interruption being permitted, and then without the printed report before me—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. At the conclusion of the three hours' statement I was asked to cross-examine the commissioner. I had no printed report before me as to what he had said, but I have now studied it and I am prepared to restate and furnish evidence in support of the charges.

Mr. HASTINGS. Was that the reason the gentleman did not accept the invitation to cross-examine him?

Mr. FREAR. What was that?

Mr. HASTINGS. That the hearing had not been transcribed.

Mr. FREAR. I wanted to find out what was material in his statement covering three hours. This is the first case in the experience of any Member of this House to my knowledge where he has sat through a statement of three hours, with the condition that there should be no interruption, and then be expected to cross-examine the witness without knowing and having before him the record made.

Mr. HASTINGS. Did the gentleman ask for an opportunity to cross-examine the commissioner after he had examined his statement?

Mr. FREAR. No. I would rather make my own statement in the same way the commissioner made his.

Mr. LEAVITT. Does the gentleman want to come before the committee now and make a general statement?

Mr. FREAR. No; but I would be willing to go before the committee and make a statement as to any of the facts and then have that statement given the same publicity as was given to the statement made by Commissioner Burke.

Mr. LEAVITT. Did the gentleman object to the procedure with regard to Commissioner Burke's statement, which was determined upon by the committee?

Mr. FREAR. I did not. I said that in all fairness he was entitled to make his statement. I believe that free discussion is always desirable.

Mr. LEAVITT. Did not the gentleman have a stenographer present at the hearing?

Mr. FREAR. I had a stenographer, but he was not a reporter.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman had a stenographer present taking notes, and the gentleman had the testimony long before it was printed.

Mr. FREAR. I have been informed that the organization represented by Mr. Collier has among its directors and responsible officials the following-named people, many of whom have written me personally indorsing my effort to secure an investigation. At this point in my remarks I submit their names, many are noted philanthropists:

Dr. Haven Emerson, New York City (professor of public health administration, Columbia University); Irving Bacheller, New York City (novelist); Robert E. Ely (director of the town hall, New York City); Mrs. H. A. Atwood, Riverside, Calif. (chairman Indian welfare division, General Federation of Women's Clubs); William Allen White, Emporia, Kans. (editor); James Ford (professor, social ethics department, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.); Elizabeth Shepley Sergeant, New York City (author and authority on Indians); Charles F. Lummis, Los Angeles, Calif. (author and authority on Indians); Rev. E. P. Wheeler, Aurora, Ill. (40 years a missionary among the Indians); William Kent, Kentfield, Calif. (former Congressman); Dr. Aurelia H. Reinhardt (president Mills College, Calif.); Stewart Edward White, San Francisco, Calif. (author); Dr. Walter M. Dickie, Berkeley, Calif. (secretary California Board of Health); Dr. William Palmer Lucas (professor pediatrics, University of California); Edyth Tate Thompson, Fresno, Calif. (secretary California Tuberculosis Association); Dr. John R. Haynes (regent, University of California; member Los Angeles Public Service Commission); Dr. Henry J. Ullman (president American Legion, Santa Barbara, Calif.); Mrs. Mary Austin, Santa Fe (author); James W. Young, Chicago; Fred M. Stein, New York City; Gertrude Bonnin, Washington (president National Association of American Indians); Jay B. Nash, Oakland, Calif.; Walter V. Woehlke, Ross, Calif.; Mrs. Frank A. Gibson, Los Angeles; Mary J. Workman, Los Angeles, Calif.; Rev. Father Robert Lucey, Los Angeles; and E. Raymond Armaby, Burlingame, Calif.

The national advisory board of the association includes Rev. John A. Ryan, D. D., George Haven Putman, Henry W. Taft, Adolph Lewisohn, Dr. John H. Finley, Dan C. Beard, George Foster Peabody, Right Rev. Monsignor J. P. Childwick, and the Right Rev. W. C. Manning.

Mr. Speaker, responding to my demand for an investigation of the Indian Bureau, Commissioner Burke asked and, as stated, was accorded by the Indian Committee nearly three hours of uninterrupted speech devoted to an attempt to gloss over charges of maladministration which I have made of his bureau. His long statement I submit, on examination, confirms by confession and avoidance some of the most serious charges, while others are sustained by undisputed evidence. Without any personal feeling against Commissioner Burke or his assistants—the subject is of far greater importance than any individual consideration—I repeat that every material charge made by me against the Indian Bureau, or the Interior Department where responsibility is divided, has been sustained by unimpeachable evidence. It is not bureau maladministration alone that is involved but the obligation of our Government to its helpless Indian wards to relieve them from archaic, autocratic, bureaucratic control and to prepare them for use of their property and for duties of that American citizenship which Congress has given to them after three-quarters of a century of Indian Bureau scandals.

A Representative in Congress should guard against needless criticism or unjust criticism of other departments of government and also of his colleagues, but he should not be fearful of giving needed criticism of agencies responsible for wrong conditions.

THE INDIAN BUREAU'S EFFORT TO INFLUENCE LEGISLATION

In a recent speech I protested against the influence of the Indian Bureau which assumes to pass upon every bill that finds its way to this Chamber and against bureaucratic influences on measures before this House. That protest was repeated in a letter sent the chairman of the Indian Committee when noting that, according to the secretary of that committee, of the first 35 bills reported to the House by the committee, 34, or all but one, had the written approval of the Secretary of the Interior, whose name is the stamp with which the Indian Bureau gives approval. The one bill of the 35 that escaped the bureau was introduced by the chairman of the Indian Committee, but thereafter it was strenuously opposed by Indian Bureau officials before a Senate committee.

During the same period I introduced several Indian welfare bills, looking to the strengthening of Indian rights now possessed by all other citizens, and an important bill to perfect titles to Indian reservation lands, all of which were turned thumbs down by the Indian Bureau. My complaint against the bureau was not personal but against an objectionable legislative system we are prone to accept in committees from officious bureaucrats for fear if objection is made we submit ourselves and our colleagues to the inference we might be unable to withstand improper influence.

I have said and I repeat that the Committee on Indian Affairs is composed of able men as sincere and independent as any men in Congress. That they would not yield their views or legislative rights knowingly to any man or any bureau. I respect their honest judgment, which is as high as that of any other committee of the House with which I have served, and that covers four major committees and several lesser committees.

I do say of that committee or any other committee, if any bureau or department of Government presumes to place its approval or disapproval of measures pending before Congress, an unwarranted act is exercised that places on the bureau legislative responsibility which under the Constitution solely rests with Members. A record of 34 approvals out of 35 bills reported and many rejections among the balance of over 100 bills before this committee is evidence of no lack of honest purpose to exercise every right of constitutional judgment by the committee but is a gross usurpation of legislative rights by the bureau.

That is all I have intended to say at any time and in no way reflects on the committee. To say less would be to surrender to bureaucratic encroachment that now menaces Congress on every hand. I could amplify this brief statement which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs from out his limited breadth of understanding has termed an apology to the committee, but the manifest purpose of the bureau to shift criticism from itself to the committee in no way affects my protest against the Indian Bureau and bureau methods.

CHARGES OF MALADMINISTRATION ADMITTED BY COMMISSIONER BURKE

At his personal request the House Indian Affairs Committee on April 10 gave Commissioner Burke right to nearly three hours of uninterrupted talk in which to prove the charges of maladministration by the Indian Bureau made by me in speeches of February 4, March 4, and March 23 were incorrect and untrue as he alleged. As I stated at the outset, I will not willingly do injustice to the Indian Bureau or any official connected with it, but after a careful examination of the 42 printed pages of Commissioner Burke's uninterrupted speech, I again charge—

First. That the Indian Bureau, without possible excuse, recommended the confiscation of $100,000 of Navajo Indian funds, and I will here submit testimony that proves this fact beyond reasonable doubt.

Second. The Indian Bureau has recommended other Indian reimbursement charges against the Navajos, Pueblos, and other Indian tribes, as stated in my speeches, as reprehensible and indefensible as the $100,000 Navajo item.

Third. The Indian Bureau approved and helped manage a scandalous settlement of over $1,000,000 of the property of Jackson Barnett, a half-witted Indian, the terms of which were as reprehensible of an allotted Indian's property as other charges made as to tribal property. This is evidenced through an admission of the facts by the department that I will present.

Fourth. The Indian Bureau has practically exclusive control of $90,000,000 of money and securities and $1,650,000,000 of Indian property held in trust for what it terms 225,000 "incompetent" Indians. No right of court review or appeal from the bureau's arbitrary decision is given to a single Indian.

Fifth. The telegram by Governor Blaine, of Wisconsin, to President Coolidge was unqualifiedly true wherein he complained that a Wisconsin Indian charged with a misdemeanor was fastened with ball and chain in a foul, insanitary cell 6 by 9 feet in size. Evidence of this fact here submitted is practically undisputed.

Sixth. I again charge that a ball and chain were used for punishing an Indian on the Fort Peck Reservation, charged with a misdemeanor, and I submit convincing affidavits of that fact.

Seventh. I submit evidence that Commissioner Burke by threats and intimidation endeavored to smother the facts last cited, and I submit startling affidavits of the Indian Bureau's control and intimidation of Indian witnesses in Washington.

Eighth. I repeat that the Indian Bureau has possession of an amazing report by the American Red Cross on Indian Bureau neglect and inefficiency affecting the health of Indian tribes, which has been smothered, and that Senators and Members who have asked to inspect the report have been refused that right.

Ninth. The Indian Bureau has failed and neglected the health and care of Indians in Wisconsin, California, Arizona, and other States, as set forth in statements of reputable medical witnesses and commissions, none of which were disputed in Commissioner Burke's three-hour speech, excepting a reference by him to the Pima Tribe, that, I submit, was incorrect.

Tenth. The Indian Bureau has caused to be introduced bill H. R. 7826, that as prepared provides that all Indians on reservations may be tried by $10 a month "judges" and sentenced to six months in jail in addition to a $100 fine for disobeying rules or regulations of the bureau. No right to a jury trial, attorney, bail, or appeal guaranteed under the Constitution is afforded by that bill, which was opposed by every Indian tribe represented in Washington, excepting a white attorney for some Indians in South Dakota.

Eleventh. The Indian Bureau has approved a grossly unjust Indian oil leasing bill, affecting 22,000,000 acres of Indian reservations, and that while oil men and bureau officials urged its passage before House and Senate committees not one Indian representative of any tribe was heard on the bill.

Twelfth. The Indian Bureau under existing law and custom has practically unlimited control of the person and property of 240,000 Indians, excepting in case of 8 felonies, without right to jury court appeal or judicial review in determining matters of "competency" or other rights guaranteed to every other American citizen.

Thirteenth. Serious complaints against the Indian Bureau lodged by Menominee Indians of Wisconsin, Blackfeet and Flathead Indians of Montana, and Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, and of other tribes, have not been answered or referred to by Commissioner Burke in his nearly three hours of uninterrupted speech.

I again ask that my resolution of investigation of the Indian Bureau by Congress be passed and all facts disclosed in order that remedial legislation may be had and the Indians of America given a self-supporting, self-respecting, and constructive program to fit them for duties of citizenship, which citizenship Congress has conferred on them by law.

THE AMERICAN INDIAN DEFENSE ASSOCIATION

I will not again recite the details of different complaints against the Indian Bureau set forth in the three speeches to which reference has been made and which Commissioner Burke sought to answer when making criticisms against myself and charges against John Collier, executive secretary, personally, and against circulars distributed by the Indian Defense Association. The speeches are definite in their charges, but a comprehensive statement of Commissioner Burke's attitude on the different charges is disclosed from his three hours without interruption speech. So far as can be had, the charges, his own explanation or excuse, and the facts in each case are here offered to serve as a basis for an investigation of the Indian Bureau asked for by my resolution.

First, let me relieve the Indian Defense Association and its secretary, John Collier, from responsibility for any statement made by me at any time. Whatever information was received by me from this organization and its secretary I verified so far as possible, and am convinced that the statements so made to me were substantially correct and that the Indian Bureau was ignorant or inexcusably wrong in its own position.

The Indian Defense Association and the various welfare associations need no defense against assaults from Commissioner Burke or any other official. Their efforts to protect and relieve the Indians throughout the country, I am convinced, are inspired solely from philanthropic motives and maintained through voluntary subscriptions. Due to this source of support and publicity more than to any other agency in my judgment is the aroused sentiment against the $10 a month Indian judge bill and the equally objectionable Indian oil leasing bill that have been exposed and opposed in both House and Senate. For that they are entitled to the thanks of Congress.

Commissioner Burke's course with Indian affairs hereafter discussed stands pilloried in public opinion because of this arrogance toward Indian welfare organizations that seek to protect and befriend the Indians.

Of John Collier, executive secretary, I will only say that no man in my experience has possessed anything like the comprehensive grasp of Indian affairs and Indian legislation shown by Mr. Collier who has first knowledge from having lived among the Indians. His activities in their behalf are in striking comparison with those of seemingly complacent officials—Collier acts through the eyes of a crusader who sees the neglect, injustice, and oppression practiced by the Indian Bureau, while the Government's guardians of the Indians act with an eye primarily directed toward permanency of bureaucracy. This is the language and judgment of many Senators and Members who are familiar with the personality and aims of Commissioner Burke, his bureau assistants, and of their predecessor in many cases.

FABULOUS WEALTH CONTROLLED BY THE INDIAN BUREAU

It should be kept in mind that due to pressure exercised on Congress in 1924 all Indians were given full rights of American citizenship. That 70 years after the Indian Bureau took over the control of our Indian wards the Indian commissioner now has under his control over $90,000,000 in money and securities belonging to various Indians and $1,650,000,000 in property belonging to 225,000 Indians.

That this money and this property is under the control of Commissioner Burke under the law; that the 225,000 Indians wherever allotments have been made are declared to be restricted or incompetent Indians and that they have no right to have their competency or ability to care for their own property determined by court proceedings but their property, like their person, is under the control of the Indian Bureau.

Commissioner Burke appeared before the House Indian Affairs Committee on April 10, pursuant to his request that he be not interrupted, and, as stated, he spoke without interruption, refusing efforts to challenge statements that would not stand analysis.

Commissioner Burke first devoted several pages of the printed "hearing" to a brief paragraph in my speech of February 4 relating to a reimbursable bridge charge he approved of $82,000 against the Pueblos of Cochiti and San Juan. In that speech I stated the whole cost of these two bridges had been loaded onto the poverty-stricken Pueblos and that three-quarters of the travel over one bridge will be by white people and on the other the proportion of Indian travel will be less than one-tenth.

Commissioner Burke admitted the whole cost of these bridges was charged against this poverty-stricken tribe, but attempted to show the charge was legitimate because Assistant Commis-sloner Merritt said so (p. 9). Witnesses competent and disinterested declare the charge against the Pueblos is indefensible; that the Cochiti Indians number less than 400, and the San Juan Indians number only 450. The most serious charge made is that former commissioners have successfully opposed the burdening of these extremely poor Indians with such charges. Commissioner Burke says (p. 10), "those Indians are very poor," yet with little land of value across the river and without consent of the Indians, if I am rightly informed, the entire charge with his approval was made against them for a bridge primarily for the use of white people.

THE NAVAJO INDIAN $100,000 CONFISCATION SCANDAL

Not one defense, I submit, is offered for the confiscation of Navajo funds.

On the $100,000 reimbursable item Commissioner Burke says:

Secretary Work made a report that one-half of the cost be reimbursable (p. 12, hearings).

This $100,000 charge was made by him without any knowledge or consent on the part of the Indians, and Secretary Work, in recommending the charge of $100,000, of course speaks for the Indian Bureau. The bureau never speaks officially in such matters except through the department head.

Commissioner Burke expresses his own views for its approval frankly when he says:

I do not see myself where there can be any serious objection to making appropriations that may seem to be desirable and in the interest of those Indians and relieve the States of Arizona and New Mexico from some of the great expense involved, in view of this great area that is not subject to taxation (p. 12, hearings).

Then he suggests that Members generally should be blamed for permitting bills to go through unchallenged if the bills are wrong. The obvious answer is that Commissioner Burke is the guardian under the law for these Indians. He knew these Indians were diseased and three generations behind other Indians, according to Mr. Merritt, of the bureau; that they only had a balance of $116,000 to their credit, and yet he says in effect that because these Indians do not pay taxes on their desert grazing lands that they should help build bridges to relieve the States within which their reservations are located.

I submit that is the general argument of others which he repeats as guardian of these diseased, uneducated, and backward Indians three generations behind their fellows.

Now for the facts. Senator CAMERON, of Arizona, said in Senate debate:

I think it would be an imposition on humanity for Congress to take out of $116,000, the little money that is now in the Treasury, half of the cost—$100,000—of this bridge and charge it to the Indians; it would be ridiculous. (RECORD, p. 4152, Feb. 15, 1926.)

I presume I know that section of the country as well as almost anyone, having lived in northern Arizona some 43 years. I have had occasion to cross the Colorado River in that section hundreds of times. The Navajo Tribe of Indians do not use that section of the country. * * * There is no reason why the Government should not at least pay half the expense of building this bridge instead of forcing these backward but honorable Indians to pay half the cost, and especially when they have never consented to it.

Senator LENROOT. This bridge is primarily for the benefit of the public and not for the Indians, is it not?

Senator CAMERON. Absolutely. * * * I would feel like it was stealing from an infant if I were to be a party here in the Senate of the United States in this unjust attempt to charge half the cost of construction and maintenance of this bridge across the Colorado River out of the only money these Indians have, which amounts only to $116,000. * * * I say it is preposterous that the Government should undertake to do such a thing. (RECORD, Feb. 17, p. 4150.)

The bill was held up in the Senate for over two weeks in an effort to have it stricken from the Interior appropriation bill. On a straight vote it would have been defeated, as it had no defenders, but in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill it was unmovable.

ONE CORPORATION HAS THE LOCAL MONOPOLY OF TOURIST TRAVEL

On February 25 Senator CAMERON said in debate:

I want to say to the Senate that I believe while that bridge would be a benefit to the State of Arizona, while it would be of benefit to the United States, it would be of especial benefit to the people who have the contract to take tourists around the rim and from the rim of the Grand Canyon National Park to Zion National Park on the north. It would be a benefit to a corporation. One corporation alone will have exclusive access and a complete monopoly.

This astounding statement from a Senator of the State most affected, who knows these Indians and location through a hundred visits, as he states, asserts that the recommendation of Secretary Work for the Indian Bureau is to give $100,000 of Navajo Indian money for a bridge when one tourist corporation alone will have exclusive access and a complete monopoly. Why did Commissioner Burke recommend in 1924 through Secretary Work this infamous "steal" from an infant, to use the words of the Senator most familiar with the location?

Again he says (RECORD, p. 4271):

It has been plainly proven here that the Navajo Indian Tribe has never, does not now, and never will derive any benefit from the Lee Ferry bridge.

Think of Commissioner Burke and Secretary Work's $100,000 reimbursable charge.

Now, listen to this distinguished Senator CAMERON, from the State most affected:

Why does the Bureau of Indian Affairs get behind a proposition to rob these poor Indians—yes; I call it highway robbery—and to take money out of the Treasury of the United States that has been deposited there for this poor Indian tribe?

Have I said anything more pointed against the bureau than these strictures on the Indian Bureau by a distinguished Senator? I desire to present indisputable evidence that would be submitted before an investigating committee if hearings can be had. Senator BRATTON, of New Mexico, is from a State greatly interested in this bridge, for the Navajo Indian Reservation is in both Arizona and New Mexico.

On February 17 RECORD, page 4151:

Mr. BRATTON. I think that no one can justify a policy on the part of the Government in reaching into the tribal funds of these Indians and taking out the sum of $100,000 without their consent and over their protest. I have received from New Mexico, due to the fact that these Indians live partly in that State, many protests against this proposed action. I am informed that the Indians are universally opposed to it; that they never consented to it, but that against their desire and over their protest it is proposed to take from them $100,000 and to establish a policy which may lead in the future to taking from the Indians sums vastly greater than the amount in this case.

Remember, this is from another distinguished Senator, in a State that Commissioner Burke suggests may get taxes from the Indians by this reimbursable item.

On page 13 of his remarkable speech in his own defense Mr. Burke said of this Navajo $100,000 "highway robbery" that his "superintendent" wrote to him:

Some time ago Mr. Chee Dodge, chairman of the Navajo council, was here and asked me about the bridge; he expressed himself as thinking it was all right. * * * That the Navajos of the western part of the reservation were receiving no benefit from the Gallup Ship rock highway, yet they would have to pay their share of the cost of building the road just the same.

In other words, because they were robbed by the highway charge a $100,000 bridge steal was all right. Queer logic, but it came from the local Indian agent, who is always expected to back up the bureau.

WHAT CHEE DODGE THOUGHT AND SAID

Here is what Chee Dodge actually said about that bridge:

Mr. BRATTON. I desire to read into the RECORD part of a letter written to me * * * signed by Commissioner Burke, which contains an excerpt from the proceedings of the tribal council of these Indians on July 7 of last year—

J. C. MORGAN (Walker translating). * * * when Congress appropriates they would like to have Congress appropriate for the benefit of the tribe. They do not want it for the benefit of some other people. They want it for the benefit of the Navajo people. * * * What we mean is that when Congress appropriates money like they did down here for the bridge at Lee Ferry they do not want that Congress appropriate this money for the bridges * * *

CHEE DODGE (who is chief among them, finishing Walker's sentence for him). They object to the use of the tribal funds for such purpose as the bridge at the ferry across the Colorado.

Senator BRATTON. We can not afford to continue this policy, which is bottomed not upon justice, not upon equity, but upon an enforced program of inequity and iniquity toward the Indians (p. 418).

Also, on page 4469, he says:

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs undertakes to follow that by resorting to an extremely technical position, namely, saying that the matter was not formally before the council * * *. To say that the Indians should resort to fine language or legal phraseology in drawing up a formal resolution is unthinkable. Their position is clearly recorded. They (the Navajos) are opposed to these two bridges. They do not want to pay for them. The money is theirs. They are now citizens, and they want things that contribute to the elevation of their citizenship.

Senator BRATTON charges Commissioner Burke with splitting hairs.

Senator CAMERON, in the same debate, page 4469:

Let us not do something because we are white men and the poor Indians on the reservation are helpless, with no one here to represent them, and the bureau that should be looking out for them and should be guarding the money they have in the Treasury recommending that this sum be taken from their tribal fund to construct a bridge which they will not use. I say it is outrageous; it is dishonest, if I may go that far.

No more bitter indictment of the Indian Bureau, its "superintendent," its "iniquitous" policy, and of the $100,000 looting of Navajo funds could be framed than by these brief extracts from speeches by two of the honorable statesmen who represent the States that Commissioner Burke says he seeks to aid.

I could quote from a half dozen other witnesses, all honorable and well-informed, and all to the same effect. Senator JONES of Washington in that debate said:

Based on what I saw of the conditions there I do not believe that the Indians should pay $100,000 toward the construction of this bridge. I do not think they will use it very much from the lay of the country. I am satisfied it should not be taken from the Indians.

Frederick S. Dellenbaugh accompanied Major Powell on his second trip down the Colorado River and has written several books about the river. He probably knows as much about the river and its surroundings as any man living. In a statement from this writer placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Senator CAMERON he says:

The Senators are perfectly willing to build a bridge over the Colorado River at Lee Ferry . . . providing the poor Navajo Indians who live near by and who will be benefited by the proposed bridge about as much as they would be by one over the Hudson (N. Y.), provided the poor Navajos pay $100,000 of the cost. Two sovereign States and the great United States demand that the Navajo Indians shall pay half of a bridge which the Government should have constructed at least a quarter of a century ago. If this absurdity can be matched anywhere in the world outside of Tibet, the writer would be glad to be informed.

Rev. Dirk Lay, missionary; Haven Emerson, M. D., president; and John Collier, secretary, of the American Indian Defense Association, the latter of whom lived with the Navajos, all presented unanswerable arguments appearing in my speech of February 4 against this vicious item. Senators, missionaries, Indians, and others I have quoted all to the same effect, and yet this $100,000 "steal" from the Navajos, to use the language of Senators, is defended by Commissioner Burke, the official guardian under this administration of the Indians and of Indian property.

I have gone to some extent to picture this indefensible proposal that is now the law, for others of like character are sure to follow because of the peculiar sense, or lack of sense, of obligation on the part of those who as guardians have the sworn duty of protecting the Indians. Not one leg is left to stand on, and by this token may other matters be judged.

NO WITNESS EVER MORE FULLY DISCREDITED

I submit no witness was ever more thoroughly discredited and impeached than Commissioner Burke in the Navajo case. In Senate debate he was squarely disputed by three Senators, all familiar with the situation, and one of them declared the bureau's action was "highway robbery" of the Indians. To the same effect were the tribal hearings related by Chee Dodge, Navajo chief, and by writers intimately familiar with the surroundings, by missionaries who have lived in that section, and other reputable witnesses, who know whereof they speak, all were of one mind, whereas the commissioner depends on a discredited Indian agent of his own department, and he adopts the agent's views as his own on a matter that confiscates $100,000 of the Navajo funds, to be paid toward a white tourist automobile bridge, where local travel is controlled entirely by one corporation that, according to Senators, now enjoys a complete monopoly.

In the record here presented Commissioner Burke, to my mind, is an unimportant figure in the problem which rests rather with a discredited system of Indian control by the Indian Bureau, of its officials who hang together, whatever the facts may be in any case, in order to maintain this Indian bureaucracy. Therein lies the responsibility and the inefficiency or worse disclosed by the Indian Bureau head.

THE INDIAN BUREAU'S IRON HAND CONTROL

It should be understood that the Indian Bureau under existing law has practically complete control of the person and property of the Indians. This is not an indictment of the present Indian Commissioner; it has existed for years; but his opposition to any efforts to break this ironclad control should bring condemnation. I have cited his liberality in giving away Indian money for bridges. The same story accompanies many of the irrigation projects. Again, the commissioner is not responsible for matters of long ago, where tragic tales of waste of Indian funds have been notorious, but responsibility is fixed when opposition to any degree of control by the Indians of their own property is to-day pressed by the Indian Bureau and Department of the Interior. I do not care to split hairs to determine the actual responsibility of the bureau compared with the department, because the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum is of slight moment when great questions of constitutional rights and of common justice are involved.

What can the Indian do with his own property? Practically nothing. Let me again say the commissioner has $90,000,000 in money and securities and $1,650,000,000 of Indian property according to his own report, which he administers.

Indian tribal lands can not be leased or sold by him without the tribe's or congressional consent, nor can their funds be expended save by the consent of Congress. But when Navajo bridge items and irrigation, highway, and other laws are unknown to the Indians until recommended by the bureau and passed by Congress, it is of little value to the Indian. A protest is all he could make in any event. Indians who have been given their citizenship, and that includes all Indians since 1924, are still kept in leading strings. The 225,000 "restricted" Indians, including those holding allotments, have no rights of property excepting in name. I do not wish to make any statement not strictly within the facts.

Let us see what these facts disclose: The allotted lands can all be leased by the Indian Bureau without the consent of their Indian owners. These lands can be secretly leased, they can be leased without competition and sometimes without consideration—save the supposed improvement resulting from the white man's use of the land.

The land of a dead Indian allottee can be sold by the Indian Bureau without the consent of the heirs.

The will of an allotted Indian has no validity until approved by the Indian Bureau, and the bureau can destroy the will without court review.

The Indian Bureau determines the heirs of an allottee and there is no court review.

The allotted Indian can not hypothecate his property, which is held or controlled by the Indian Bureau.

The allotted Indian's contracts or leases are void until approved by the Indian Bureau.

The allotted Indian funds are in the hands of the Indian Bureau and can be disposed of by the bureau without interference by the Indian or reference to Congress, except where special laws direct cash payments to be made.

The allotted Indian can have no accounting from the bureau, his official guardian.

The allotted Indian can not hire lawyers to represent his interests without the approval of the Indian Bureau.

The allotted Indian can not be declared competent or able to care for his own property or secure possession therefor without the approval of the Indian Bureau.

I believe I have fairly stated the Indian's rights, or rather lack of rights, that go with his new American citizenship.

I do not charge that the Indian Bureau dissipates or mismanages the funds of its wards. I do not know nor do I suggest improper use, unless specifically stated.

The fact that no court review or oversight is permitted in any of the above cases, save in a partial way in Oklahoma, but that the Indian and his property are under exclusive bureau control, even to the determination of "competency," is a monstrous proposal not found elsewhere in the world.

THE JACKSON BARNETT CASE OF MALADMINISTRATION

Digressing from the speech of Commissioner Burke in order to make more clear the real issue of maladministration, not alone by the Indian Bureau but also of Congress over Indian property, I have before me a report where in 1925 charges were filed against Commissioner Burke. How specifically, I do not attempt to say, but I understand the House Committee on Indian Affairs made some examination into the charges. They relate to a half-wit Indian named Jackson Barnett, a millionaire Creek Indian in his dotage, who was "kidnaped" by a woman of bad reputation. Her record is contained in the inspector's report of about a dozen pages of closely typed manuscript made by the Indian Bureau's inspector. It would be impossible to picture a more immoral character or more designing influence exerted over a weak old man than by this case. According to the Indian Bureau inspector, Barnett was kidnaped, and without previous acquaintance with the woman, when under the influence of liquor forced upon him by the woman, they were married. I quote from the inspector's report:

Police officers who saw Jackson Barnett soon after his arrival in Coffeyville (day of marriage) state that he (Barnett) had a doped appearance, and a newspaper reporter named Fitzgerald advised me that Jackson (Barnett) told him the woman had given him whisky en route to Coffeyville to his home.

Pages of the report in the Indian Office are given over to details of the "kidnaping" and of the unspeakable record of the woman who married Barnett, as stated. I am not quoting any of these loathsome details, but they then put the bureau in possession of all the alleged facts connected with the half-wit Barnett's marriage.

In a letter before me under date of March 11, 1925, it is recited that Jackson Barnett is a full-blood Creek Indian "now about 73 years of age, unable to read or write, but speaks the English language to some extent."

At best his mental capacity is limited, and this coupled with his lack of education naturally places him in that class of Indians usually referred to as incompetent.

The letter then sets forth Barnett's oil properties and royalties invested in Liberty bonds of considerably over $1,000,000.

During the early part of 1920 Anna Laura Lowe, a white woman, and Jackson Barnett were married, he then being some 68 years of age. An unsuccessful effort appears to have been made to upset this marital relationship. * * * During the fall of 1922 Mrs. Barnett, accompanied by Jackson, visited this city. * * * It was urged that unless some disposition was made of Jackson's estate during his lifetime, or at least a part of it, endless and expensive litigation would result after his death by the presentation of spurious claims of relationship sponsored by designing and unscrupulous claimants.

Now, listen to this remarkable proposition that was carried out by the commissioner, according to the letter before me:

HERE WAS THE APPROVED DIVISION OF $1,100,000

A plan was finally evolved under which, through a written request signed by Barnett, he was permitted to donate $1,100,000 of his restricted funds then in the form of United States Liberty bonds in the following manner:

- (a) Five hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the American Baptist Home Mission Society.
- (b) Five hundred and fifty thousand dollars to his wife, Anna Laura Barnett.

Under the terms of these donations, which were approved by this department on February 1, 1923, the $550,000 in Liberty bonds so donated to the Baptist Home Mission Society were deposited in trust with the Equitable Trust Co. of New York City under an agreement pursuant to which the income therefrom up to $20,000 a year should be paid to the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes of Muskogee * * * for the use and benefit of Jackson Barnett during the remainder of his natural life.

Thereafter to the Baptist society for support of schools named therein.

Of the $550,000 donated to Anna Laura Barnett, $350,000 became her outright property, the remainder of $200,000 in Liberty bonds * * * income therefrom of $7,500 to go annually to Jackson Barnett during remainder of his natural life, thereafter to Anna Laura Barnett (wife) and Maxine Sturgess, a daughter of Mrs. Barnett by a former husband. Owing to legal complications which shortly resulted, none of the interest has been paid.

As to the disposition made by Mrs. Barnett of the funds ($350,000) turned over to her from Jackson's estate (Jackson still living) I am not advised.

The above extracts from a long 9-page letter are of more than passing importance, because the letter is addressed to "The President, The White House," and is signed by "Hubert Work, Secretary of the Interior."

The facts contained in the letter necessarily were furnished by Commissioner Burke, who as Indian Commissioner with full knowledge of the report in his office entitled "Inspection report, kidnapping of Jackson Barnett, Anna Laura Lowe" proceeded to divide up the halfwit's property, which is under the bureau's control. Court proceeding brought by Jackson Barnett or other parties in interest against the church society, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, et al., apart from interests of claimed heirs, have revealed this transaction sought to be set aside by the courts.

This brief recital of an amazing case of bureau control and division of an Indian halfwit's property is only one chapter of an effort by bills pending to take away from the Oklahoma courts certain jurisdiction conferred on them by Congress. A subcommittee of the House Committee on Indian Affairs considered charges against the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The report of that committee and the dissenting views on the alleged misconduct of Commissioner Burke should be investigated together with all the facts surrounding this remarkable transaction, which I have only briefly presented but based on a letter written by the department or Indian Bureau that certainly gives the most favorable construction possible to the acts of Commissioner Burke.

Having in mind the gift by Commissioner Burke of $550,000 of Barnett's Liberty bonds to the Baptist Missionary Society, it is interesting to note that that organization finds nothing to criticize in the affairs of the commissioner. I quote from the commissioner's report of 1922, page 22:

That the board of managers of the Baptist Home Missionary Society, having a somewhat intimate knowledge of the Indian conditions * * * desires to assure the Secretary of the Interior of its continued and growing confidence in the administration of Indian matters through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs * * *. The board most emphatically disavows all sympathy with criticism of the Indian administration, which originates * * * with those whose unjust exploitation of Indians is thwarted by the Indian Office. * * *

Here is the latest chapter called to my attention. It is a Washington dispatch of day before yesterday and relates some of the details of the notorious Barnett case, to which I have referred. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars given the wife is beyond recovery, but suit has been begun to recover the balance of the $550,000 allotment to her and her daughter approved by Commissioner Burke:

SARGENT ACTS TO HOLD $200,000 FOR INDIAN—ATTORNEY GENERAL WOULD KEEP BONDS OF JACKSON BARNETT, 75, FROM HIS ALLEGED WIFE

(Special to the New York Times)

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Attorney General John G. Sargent, through Assistant Attorney General George P. Barse, started another action to-day in the equity courts to save a trust fund consisting of $200,000 in Liberty bonds for their owner, Jackson Barnett, 75-year-old Creek Indian, of Okmulgee County, Okla., who was declared insane in 1912.

This fund is part of the $1,100,000 in Liberty bonds belonging to Barnett, of which his guardian, Elmer S. Bailey, lost control by the thumb-print signature of Barnett on an order requesting the Secretary of the Interior to surrender it.

Of the total lot of bonds $550,000 went into the possession of Anna Laura Lowe, alleged wife of Barnett, and the remainder into the custody of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, according to the petition filed by the Attorney General, in which he asks permission to intervene.

The intervention is sought in a suit filed by Mr. Bailey to protect the trust fund of $200,000 in bonds against the claims of the alleged wife of Barnett and her daughter, Maxine Sturgess. The $200,000 fund is now in the vaults of the Riggs National Bank, of this city, under a trust agreement.

The Attorney General stated that Anna Laura Lowe took Barnett from his home in Oklahoma in February, 1920, and then to Coffeyville, Kans., and went through a purported marriage ceremony with Barnett, notwithstanding his mental incompetency and almost total ignorance.

Afterwards she engaged Harold McGugin, a Coffeyville lawyer, to negotiate with the Secretary of the Interior to acquire from Barnett's estate the $1,100,000 in bonds.

The $200,000 in bonds in the Riggs National Bank are part of the $550,000 which the Government says got into possession of Anna Laura Lowe.

IF MR. BURKE HAD THE WISDOM OF SOLOMON

Again I repeat that I am not seeking personally to indict Mr. Burke in this or any other matter. I am seeking to expose the startling situation wherein the Indian Commissioner with $90,000,000 of Indian moneys and securities and $1,650,000,000 of Indian property under his control has no court scrutiny nor right of the owners of this property to inquire into its management or disposition. If Mr. Burke had the wisdom of Solomon and the virtue of all the apostles combined, few people would consent to place their properties entirely in his hands, and yet the property of 225,000 restricted or incompetent Indians is now held by him without right to court review of his management or mismanagement, excepting where specific law may be invoked. After the impeachment of his testimony and motives in the $100,000 Navajo Indian charge and the Barnett case, as presented by himself with his own admissions, I submit that in wisdom he does not measure up with the examples in history I have named.

In the Navajo $100,000 charge and others of like character it was a misuse of tribal funds by Congress with the approval of the Indian Bureau. With the Barnett case and others of like character it is a misuse of allotted Indians funds by the bureau where no inspection or court review is possible under existing law. Can I make the situation plainer?

THE BALL-AND-CHAIN CASES

Returning to the nearly three hours' refusal-to-be-interrupted speech of Commissioner Burke in defense of his bureau, I come next to the "ball-and-chain" methods pursued at some of the Indian agencies with approval of the Indian Bureau. Let me repeat, the mistreatment of Indians by Indian agents is only a minor cause of complaint. I charge that the Indian Bureau with its spokesman, Commissioner Burke, not only covers up, but approves such mistreatment of Indians, and in that connection I shall give an unimpeachable witness of Commissioner Burke's judgment on the subject.

Take first the Wisconsin case. Governor Blaine, of Wisconsin, sent to President Coolidge the following telegram:

MADISON, WIS., February 15, 1926.

President CALVIN COOLIDGE,

Washington, D. C.:

Responsible woman, whose word I believe, reports that Paul Moore, an Indian, charged with a misdemeanor, was found on January 26 at Lac du Flambeau (Wis.) Agency jail, in a cell 6 by 8 feet, with clogged toilet, and with ball and chain fastened to ankle. In same jail were incarcerated Indian women. This condition is abhorrent to the dictates of decency and our vaunted civilization. This is the tyranny of the Dark Ages and the practice of the degenerate dominate to terrorize the Indian who needs help more than a jail. In the name of humanity, I beg that that sort of thing cease.

JOHN J. BLAINE, Governor.

In his defense and excuse of such action Mr. Burke says (p. 26 of the hearings):

Paul Moore, together with two other Indians, took three Indian girls of the Lac du Flambeau Reservations and spent three nights with them. One girl is now in a delicate condition and alleges Paul Moore is responsible therefor. He was apprehended, together with the others, and they confessed their guilt. Moore was sentenced by the court of Indian offenses and was assigned to the potato farm and set to digging potatoes. He escaped and was later returned, when a ball and chain were placed on him. He again escaped and has not yet been returned.

Mr. Burke admits the ball-and-chain punishment.

No judge or jury would accept the other statements of Mr. Burke unsupported by proof. No one will condone the offense, if true, although Mr. Burke in his speech assumes that anyone objecting to Spanish Inquisition punishment does so because of sympathy for the offender. Any attorney would inquire, Is it true that Moore and his associates were with the women; if so, what evidence is to be had that Moore was responsible for subsequent conditions, and what proof was had and what was the influence used, if so, to secure any plea of guilty which is alleged—but nothing furnished to confirm that statement. This is not to excuse in any degree any offense, if an offense was committed, but to get some facts in a case where letters to Senator LA FOLLETTE heretofore inserted in the RECORD state that Moore was brought before Superintendent Hammitt of the agency; that an Indian named Sawgetchwayghezis, posing as a judge, was present, who could not read or write or talk English. He certainly would be forgiven for misspelling his own name. That Hammitt prepared and read Moore's sentence to six months' imprisonment in the agency jail. All this appears in the letter found in RECORD of March 4.

COMMISSIONER BURKE APPROVES BALL AND CHAIN USE BY HIS AGENTS

Assuming that all the facts were as claimed by Commissioner Burke, I submit his own statement (p. 27 of the hearings):

I say I have no sympathy for Paul Moore, and I think he ought to be in chains for not the time of the sentence of the Indian court but for a much longer period.

Commissioner Burke approves the ball-and-chain treatment, which is undented, but he would have it continued for a much longer period than six months. No one knows just what his judgment would determine for ball-and-chain treatment, but that is his standard set for Indian agents throughout the country. The commissioner approves ball-and-chain penalties and unlimited sentences by his agents who write the findings of the $10 a month courts.

I am trying to get before you a correct understanding of the official at the head of the Indian Bureau, who has been impeached by overwhelming testimony and shown to be without knowledge of the Navajo Indian $100,000 case where he depends on and indorses his agent's statement of Chee Dodge's views. In like manner in secret he is charged with having parceled out over a half million dollars to a woman of unsavory reputation compared with whom young Moore may be a model of propriety, and in the ball-and-chain case he not only approves six months' punishment with chains but thinks it not long enough. An effort to confuse the alleged offense with character of punishment is shown without comment.

A Reverend Mr. Murray at the agency, who presumably may be under many obligations to the local agent, also is quoted by Commissioner Burke in support of his agent. Murray writes (p. 27, hearings):

I know Mr. Hammitt to be a clean, pure-minded, and fair-minded executive, always kind and polite to all, including lawbreakers who come before him from time to time.

Not before the Indian judge, you will note, but before Hammitt. I make no comment on this whitewash letter whether written from a pail of hypocrisy or ignorance that attempts to justify the ball-and-chain czar of the Lac du Flambeau (Wis.) agency.

The following affidavits from those who acquainted themselves with the facts are sufficient to give a fair understanding of Hammitt and his "kind and polite" methods. They are sent me without suggestion on my part as to any particular matters to be covered. Only a brief statement of facts was asked. These facts sworn to by witnesses are as follows:

THE LAC DU FLAMBEAU BALL-AND-CHAIN CASE

STATE OF WISCONSIN,

County of Ashland:

Cecelia S. Rabideaux, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says: I am now 24 years of age and reside in the village of Odanah, within the Bad River Reservation, in Ashland County, Wis. On the 21st day of January, 1926, I was informed that my brother, Paul Moore, had been seized by the Indian police of said village, and, together with Maggie Crowe, who I asked to go with me, called on said police at the office of the Government farmer in said village and there asked to be advised as to what the warrant read for the arrest of Paul Moore. One Bawdee Marksman, who at times acts as a police, said, "It is not necessary that we have a warrant." I then asked, "How is that?" Bawdee Marksman then in substance further stated: "The Indian agent at Lac du Flambeau wrote to the Indian agent at Ashland, Mr. P. S. Everest, and that he in turn wrote to the Government farmer, Mr. A. L. Doan, who directed us to take Paul Moore the first time we saw him."

Paul Moore was put in jail at Odanah and there kept until the next morning, January 22, when he was taken to Lac du Flambeau, so then formed, by one Albert Snow, an Indian police for the Lac du Flambeau Reservation agency. I asked Maggie Crowe to accompany me to Lac du Flambeau. We boarded the train therefor Tuesday morning, January 26, 1926, arriving at the said agency at 12 o'clock noon. We entered the agency office, and I introduced myself to the superintendent, Mr. Hammitt, with saying that I was Paul Moore's sister from Odanah, and was there to see Paul, and also asked as to what he intended to do with him. He stated that he intended to keep him there and that we would find him in the jail or in the dining room of the school, as he did not know where they would feed him. We then went out to the jail and there found Paul Moore in one of the cells therein, the size of which was about 6 by 8 feet. The same contained two bunks, and also in one corner thereof was a clogged toilet, from which came a stench that filled the room. Fastened to Paul Moore's ankle was a ball and chain.

In the same room, but outside of cells, were three men and a woman, all Indians, whose names we there learned were William Roy, Harry King, Charles Boneosh, and Mrs. Boneosh, who were all served with lunch soon after we were there by children of the school. I was informed by Mrs. Boneosh that, by reason of an arrest previous to the one for which they were then there, she and her husband were sentenced by Superintendent Hammitt to pay a fine of $75 each; that that was all the money they had, and her husband handed it to said superintendent for her release, and he served time, along with several other prisoners, in work of repair about the said agency.

ANOTHER AFFIDAVIT ON THE WISCONSIN BALL-AND-CHAIN AGENCY STATE OF WISCONSIN,

County of Ashland, ss:

Maggie Crowe, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says I am of part Chippewa Indian blood, now 29 years of age, and reside in the village of Odanah, Wis.

I was on the 21st day of January, 1926, with Mrs. Cecelia S. Rabideaux when she called on the police of said village at the Government farmer's office in Odanah, and heard her ask to be informed as to what the warrant read for the arrest of Paul Moore. The police said that they had no warrant, that the Indian agent of Lac du Flambeau had written to the Indian agent at Ashland, Mr. P. S. Everest, and that he in turn had written to Mr. A. L. Doan, the farmer, who directed them, the police, to take Paul Moore as soon as they saw him.

Paul Moore was locked up on this 21st day of January in jail at Odanah, and on the following morning taken to the depot handcuffed and put onto the southbound 6.50 a. m. Northwestern train in charge of one Albert Snow, an Indian police from the Lac du Flambeau Indian Reservation.

I accompanied Mrs. Cecelia S. Rabideaux, January 26, 1926, to the Lac du Flambeau Indian Agency on a visit to her brother, Paul Moore, who we found in a cell within the agency jail. The air therein was very offensive, and on Mrs. Rabideaux's inquiry as to what smelled so, Paul Moore remarked that it was the toilet in the corner of the cell he was in, and showed us that it would not flush. This cell was about 6 by 8 feet and had two bunks therein, and to Mr. Moore's ankle was fastened a ball and chain. Outside of the cells in the same room was four other Indian prisoners, whose names we learned were William Roy, Harry King, Charles Boneosh, and Mrs. Boneosh. The woman told us that she and her husband had been, before this sentence for which they were now there, each fined $75, that being all the money they had. Her husband handed it to the said Lac du Flambeau Indian agent for her release and he served time in labor about the agency premises along with others, for which he got no pay.

CONFISCATES CLOTHES AND LEAVES BALL-AND-CHAIN ORNAMENTS
STATE OF WISCONSIN, County of Ashland, ss:

Mrs. Mary Moore, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says, I am a mixed-blood Chippewa Indian, now 46 years of age, residing in the village of Odanah, Wis., and the mother of 11 living children, 1 of them being Paul Moore, now 26 years of age.

On the 21st day of January, 1926, my son, Paul Moore, was arrested without warrant by the Indian police of this village and held in jail in said village until the following morning when he was delivered by them, handcuffed, at the depot of the Northwestern Railway to one Albert Snow, who, I was there told, was an Indian police of the Lac du Flambeau Indian Reservation, and who took with him aboard the south bound 6.50 train, Paul Moore.

I was informed by Paul Moore that he was first detained by the superintendent of the Lac du Flambeau Indian School and Agency in a jail at such agency, for five days after the 27th day of October last, and at which time he was made to take off his clothes, the same of which the superintendent of said agency took in charge and furnished old clothes for him to put on.

I am now indirectly advised that since the 22d day of January, 1926, the superintendent of the Lac du Flambeau School and Agency has sold Paul Moore's clothes, the same of which was an overcoat purchased in said October last at a cost of $45 and a suit bought about a month before at a cost of $35, together worth $80.

THE INDIAN AGENT SELLS MOORE'S CLOTHES, WITH A BALL AND CHAIN FOR SECURITY

STATE OF WISCONSIN,
County of Ashland, ss:

Charles La Casse, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says: I am now 20 years of age, and a member of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Chippewa Indians, on the Lac du Flambeau Reservation, in Vilas County of said State, where I have resided about all my life, except for the time of my attendance at the Tomah School, in this State, and at the Mount Pleasant School, in the State of Michigan, until the evening of January 22, 1926.

With the view of asking the superintendent in charge of the Lac du Flambeau Indian Agency, Mr. J. S. Hemmitt, for an allowance out of my trust fund, though having been at a former request denied I was at the said agency office to again make such a request through the so-called chief of police, a Mr. William Mattigosh, on the 22d day of January, 1926. While there and before Mr. Mattigosh could speak for me he was given charge of one Paul Moore, who he conducted to the jail of said agency. I followed him there and into the jail and saw Mr. Mattigosh place said Paul Moore in one of the cells therein and also saw him fasten a ball and chain to Paul Moore's ankle. Mr. Mattigosh then closed the door of the cell in which was the said Paul Moore and locked it, as he did also the outer door of said jail after we had come out.

We then went into the agency office. I there heard the superintendent of the said agency say to the clerk thereof, a Mr. W. H. Shawnee, that they would sell Paul Moore's clothes. I was soon thereafter given a check on a bank of Wisconsin Rapids, Wis., for $15, and then asked by said superintendent to buy Paul Moore's clothes. This I declined to do; but I understand that they were sold to Mr. Mattigosh, who offered $12 for them, an overcoat and a full suit, which I think from my examination of them must be worth at least $40.

Four affidavits from responsible Indian witnesses have been submitted.

Mr. Burke, on his own statement, approves such conditions and such treatment of Indians. I do not know whether Hammitt took or stole Moore's clothing in a moment's aberration when the religious influence of Reverend Murray was quiescent or how much he got for Moore's clothes, but the significant fact is noted that when the trail got hot and Hammitt became uncertain of results Moore was allowed to escape from his cage minus his clothes but carrying his ball-and-chain ornaments away as a souvenir of the place and of his "kind and polite" jailer.

This is a case from my own State. I do not know whether Moore committed any offense, neither does Mr. Burke. Without attorney, jury, or right to any ball or appeal, he was kidnapped without papers and brought back 70 miles, where a ball and chain was placed on him while locked up in a foul-smelling cell. Then he "escaped," ball and chain and all excepting $75 in good clothes kept by Hammitt. These facts seem undisputed; yet the most serious part of the whole outrageous travesty on justice is that Commissioner Burke approves such ball-and-chain treatment by his agents.

THE FORT PECK BALL-AND-CHAIN CASE

I now come to another ball-and-chain case that, to my mind, is more significant and serious than the Wisconsin Moore case.

At a dinner given at the Lafayette Hotel, this city, before 150 diners, two Indians from the Fort Peck Reservation exhibited handcuffs and chains which they both stated to the guests had been used on their reservation for punishment of prisoners.

On page 28 of the hearings Commissioner Burke said—

We have investigated the case. In the first place, we have no information or knowledge as to where they (the Indian speakers) got possession of the chains that have been exhibited and were exhibited, I think, at a dinner held here recently, but here is a statement from the superintendent (this is another kind and polite agent), answering a letter we wrote him concerning the matter. He writes under date of March 25, 1926:

"I do not know where these gentlemen got the chains that they claim to have. It is possible that they were taken from the agency jail, but I doubt that very much. * * *. As to the statement that they were used in shackling Benjamin Kills Thunder while he was imprisoned at the agency jail, this is a bold lie, and Rufus Ricker and Meade Steel knew they were lying when they made the statement. * * *. He escaped from the jail once and the officers had a difficult time capturing him. He should have been put in chains, as he has caused us a good deal of trouble. However, he nor anyone else was ever shackled by me or anyone connected with the agency since my administration."

The charge against Benjamin Kills Thunder was for a misdemeanor and during the agent's administration. Then Commissioner Burke submitted what purported to be a court docket which is corroborative of the ball-and-chain dates and the prisoner named. It says:

Be it remembered that on this 14th day of August, 1924, personally appeared before me J. M. Larson, who filed written complaint against the defendant, Benjamin Kills Thunder, charging him with having committed the crime of disturbing the peace.

He was arrested and ordered by the court to be imprisoned in the county jail of Roosevelt for a period of 60 days and pay a fine of $15. Done in open court this 14th day of August, 1924. John O. Hanson, Justice of peace.

Here follows the sworn statement of facts affecting the ball-and-chain treatment that Commissioner Burke said was denied by the superintendent. Both witnesses in letter to me contained in speech of March 4 gave full details of the case. From the affidavits Commissioner Burke and his assistant owe a humble apology to Congress if the facts related about his office are as stated.

Brief extracts from the letter in speech of March 4 are here set forth. The shackles and chains exhibited in Washington were taken from the Fort Peck Reservation on January 20, 1926:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 4, 1926.

HON. JAMES A. FREAR,
Committee on Indian Affairs,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We desire to call your attention, as an exhibit bearing on H. R. 7826 and H. R. 9315, the shackles and chains taken from the police office in the same building as the Indian reservation jail at Fort Peck, Mont., January 20, 1926.

We desire to state this is not a typical shackle and chain, because there is no heavy iron ball attached to it and no lock for chaining the Indian to the wood or stone wall of his prison.

This apparatus was purchased with money voted by Congress for support and civilization of the Fort Peck Indians. We do not know whether this particular expenditure came out of our own money or tax money. Very likely it came out of our own money.

We desire to add this fact: All kinds of labor known to be performed around a reservation; sometimes the labor is needed by the agency and sometimes it is needed for the convenience of an Indian Bureau employee, and we Indians are captured and sentenced in this arbitrary way and put to work, sometimes for the Indian Bureau, but more often for the Indian Bureau employees. We want to ask you whether this is not plain slavery.

We want to point out to you that it is no use just to defeat the Indian Bureau bill H. R. 7826, because of these things they are doing now, but Indians must be set free from this kind of brutal treatment and slavery, and we want Congress to set us free by giving us rights in a real court.

If the Indian Bureau or any other persons disputes the above statements, we desire that they shall confront us, and we will support statements, multiply examples, and we will proceed under oath and furnish any needed corroboration.

Very truly yours,

MEADE STEELE,
RUFUS RICKER, Sr.

Here follows a remarkable story of drastic efforts by high Indian Bureau officials to intimidate and frighten witnesses whose offense consisted in revealing the treatment accorded Indians at Fort Peck (Mont.) Agency. "Thunder's case isn't the only one":

MR. BURKE AND MR. MERITT PUNISH THOSE WHO "FIGHT THE BUREAU"

This affidavit is executed in Washington, D. C., April 9, 1926, because two days ago, April 7, I was taken into Commissioner Burke's office by Mr. Meritt.

They told me that they had found out the statement about Benjamin Kills Thunder was not true.

I make the following affidavit:

"I have known Benjamin Kills Thunder a long time and what I stated in a letter to Representative FREAR March 4 is common knowledge at the Fort Peck Reservation. It was about September, 1923, that Benjamin Kills Thunder was in the jail at Fort Peck Reservation. Benjamin Kills Thunder sent a note to me asking me to come to see him. He asked me to talk to the superintendent and ask the superintendent to take the chains off his legs. Benjamin told me he had left the reservation without permission and came to Fort Totten Reservation in North Dakota to see his relatives, and when he came back the policeman and the superintendent arrested him. Benjamin told me that he was tried before the reservation judge for leaving the reservation without a pass and was then sentenced to jail, and I think the term was 60 days.

"Then I went and talked to the superintendent, Mr. James B. Kitch. Mr. Kitch said to me, 'Now, Ricker, you go and talk to that young man and tell him to behave. Give him a good talking to.' Mr. Kitch said also, 'You know, Mr. Ricker, if I let this boy go by without punishment, then other Indians will go off the reservation without a permit and they may get in trouble and I will have to bear the blame.'"

Mr. Kitch did not refer to any other charge against Benjamin Kills Thunder.

Then I went and talked to Kills Thunder and said I have sons like you and I want you to take my advice like you were my own son. And I said be good and do good. I did not know of any bad conduct, but I talked to him about the kind of bad conduct other young men are guilty of sometimes and talked with him just like he was my own son and said, You know it is a very bad thing for you to be here with chains on your legs.

Benjamin Kills Thunder was very anxious to know what they were going to do to him, and I said if he would take the superintendent's advice and take my advice that Mr. Kitch had told me he would take the chains off his legs. So Benjamin agreed to take my advice, and then the policeman came while we were talking and they took Benjamin over to the blacksmith shop. I did not go into the blacksmith shop but went on toward the store, but they took the chains off in the blacksmith shop and then they turned him loose.

I testify that when I talked with Mr. Kitch and with the boy there was no reference to any other offense except going off the reservation without a permit, and there was talk about the case, and nobody ever spoke of any offense except that.

I still have in my possession the note that Benjamin sent to me. I have it here in Washington.

There is no doubt in my mind that the facts are the way I have told them.

Of course Benjamin Kills Thunder's case isn't the only one. All the Indians know they must have a permit and will be punished if they go off the reservation without one. This has been the case for a great many years, and it is the case to-day.

Mr. Burke told me at this interview two days ago that if the Indians fight the bureau then they can't get any legislation; they can't get any of their bills through. Other Indians who are here tell me he has told them the same thing. I know that when I make this affidavit I am bringing more trouble on me, but I must tell the truth.

I am a man of 58 and am a Presbyterian missionary at home and an elder in my church, and this is not my first trip to Washington, but it is the toughest time I have ever had. I am hurting myself. When the five-year program was begun and the Indian general council was called I was elected the first president by the tribe. I am down here on the authority of the tribe and on a petition signed by more than 300 individual members of the tribe. But the Indian Bureau will not recognize me as a delegate and will not pay any of my expenses from the tribal fund. All the bureau will do is to lend me money which has to be paid out of my individual property. It would be so easy for me if I would deny the truth and submit to the Indian Bureau in everything, but I am a man and I am a Christian, and I must be as truthful as I can.

AN EX-SERVICE MAN AND HIS WIFE PROMISED LOTS OF FIGHTING

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 9, 1926.

I, Meade Steele, wish to make the following statement:

I believe that the Indian Bureau is going to make charges against me, but I can't find out what these charges are going to be. I testify that the Indian Bureau took my wife into a hotel and attempted to get her to make statements against me.

I am an ex-service man. I volunteered and went through the whole war in Europe, and I have an honorable discharge. My tribe, who know me well, have sent me to Washington to represent them. The Indian Bureau will not recognize their right to do this, and they will not allow my expenses to be paid out of the tribe's money, but my father-in-law is helping me out and other relatives, so that I am able to stay here.

How can I down here in Washington fight against charges against my personal character which the Indian Bureau has got up with all its machinery? And what have these charges got to do with my work here, since my people officially sent me here? I call this blackmail, and I ask whether it is fair play for a great Government bureau to hound me with personal charges, which I can't meet in Washington, and to persecute my wife because I am here for work which my tribe has ordered me to do which the Indian Bureau doesn't want me to do. Mr. Burke said to me: "As long as you fight this bureau, you will get all the fighting you want." But I ask whether I should have to fight against slander and whether my wife has to be persecuted and evil charges against my character dragged together. I don't fight the Indian Bureau officers by trying to get evil stuff about their private lives, and I don't think that is the way public fighting ought to be done.

I have General Pershing's statement to me, which says: "With a consecrated devotion to duty you have loyally served your country." Now, I must serve my own tribe, no matter what kind of hell they make for me.

MENTAL AND PHYSICAL MANACLES AND CHAINS

Manacles and chains are not alone made from steel forged to control the bodily movements of Indians who are charged with misdemeanors by Indian agents. Manacles and chains, financial and terrorizing, are fastened onto Indians by the heads of the Indian Bureau, based on these two amazing affidavits.

Steele, a soldier over in France, one of 17,000 American Indian veterans, committed the heinous offense of telling me his story and at a public dinner of displaying handcuffs and chains that were on a prisoner at the Fort Peck Reservation. How many other cases occur, we may judge, but this case of Benjamin Kills Thunder is beyond controversy. Chained up because of a "misdemeanor," according to the Indian agent's "court record." Chained up because the Indian had left the reservation without the agent's permission, says Ricker and Steele. Here steps in the guardian angel of the Indians in the form of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who, it is alleged, tries through Steele's wife to force him to change his story. Refusing to pay Steele any funds as the representative of his tribe duly selected, yet left without money and dependent upon his relatives, Steele refuses to be browbeaten by the commissioner, who tells him he can not afford to fight the bureau. And the soldier who enlisted for his country's defense, for he could not be drafted, a soldier with an honorable record, was threatened through his wife and personally threatened with being stranded 2,500 miles from home unless he recanted. That is his story under oath that gives color to Indian Bureau methods stronger than any steel ball and chains out on the reservation. Ball and chains in Washington, fastened by the heads of the Indian Bureau, within 2 miles of the Capitol and of the Congress that declared all Indians to be American citizens. Chained up by his "guardians," who threatened him with loss of needed financial aid unless he changed his testimony given to a Member of Congress when seeking to relieve the Indian people of unjust persecution. That should be shouted from the housetops.

Not content with trying to scare Steele into submission the Indian Bureau officials brought their manacles and chains to bear on Ricker. What was his offense? Here in the city of Washington he sought to bring to the attention of Congress the cruel methods at the Fort Peck agency that manacled Indians who were absent from the agency without leave. Who would you believe? This highly respected Christian Indian, a chieftain of his tribe, highly honored by his people, a man of character who had no possible improper motive for manufacturing a story or bringing to Washington the chains used in Montana for the punishment of prisoners. He is corroborated by the local Indian agent's record of the arrest of the same prisoner at the time stated by Ricker in 1924, and on a "misdemeanor."

Like the Indian agent among the Navajos who sent back the shady Chee Dodge story, and like the agent at Lac du Flambeau, who posed as a "kind and polite" saint, a Fort Peck Indian named "Whit Wright" sends back a story, and the Indian Bureau, with true bureaucratic methods, goes the local agent one better in the use of the big stick.

Mr. Burke offered a letter in this case signed by Whit Wright (p. 29, hearings), wherein Whit Wright says he has investigated charges by Ricker and Steele as to ball and chain and asserts a man named Muskrat says it is false if charged while Muskrat was acting as "judge." Fort Peck Indians told me Whit Wright's standing would be found in the report of the Indian Bureau for 1895. I quote from page 195 of that report—

Crime.—The half-breed Whit Wright was tried by the United States court in Helena for the murder of a telegraph operator here (Fort Peck Agency, Mont.) last August and sentenced to 10 years confinement and is liable to have his sentence reduced instead of being hung as he richly deserved. * * * I am very desirous of having him hung on the reservation on the very spot where he committed his crime as an object lesson to the rest of the tribe.

W. A. SPOULE,
Captain, Eighth Cavalry, Acting Agent.

Apparently Captain Sproule's "desires" never materialized because Whit Wright now appears as a character witness for the Indian Bureau.

WHEN THE BUREAU CHIEFS PUT ON THE SCREWS

That is enough to challenge attention even of Congress, but what can be said of bureau officials who get Ricker, a chieftain among his own people, and here try to force him to change his testimony. What of a bureau that is trying to conceal the true facts by threatening those who "fight the bureau" when giving the facts to Members of Congress? The bureau tried to frighten Ricker into the rôle of an ingrate with his own people through threats carried out that no money would be given him from the tribal fund to pay his expenses as a representative of the tribe sent here duly elected by them. The bureau holds the purse strings, right or wrong, with no court of appeal. It is a case that justifies the abolition by Congress of this czarlike bureau autocracy.

Manacles and chains are welded on the wrists and ankles of Indians by Indian agents, but it is the bureau that controls their persons and their property; that throws the fear of bureau vengeance into their souls all over the country if they dare oppose the bureau. Here I have presented facts that can not be ignored.

I have literally scores of complaints of bureau oppression and here in the city of Washington, within the shadow of the Capitol, we have cases sworn to under oath that cry out for an investigation by Congress, which I have asked for by my resolution.

DISEASE, DEATHS, AND STARVATION OF INDIANS ALLEGED

Commissioner Burke made light of disease, deaths, and starvation among the Indians. The evidence of neglect is overwhelming. I will not repeat all the facts contained in my speech of March 4 that are set forth definitely and certainly. If we are true to our obligation to care for the Indians we must know the facts. The Indian Defense Association has set forth conditions affecting the Pimas, the Pueblos, the Navajos, and other tribes that should be investigated by Congress. In the case of the Pimas it is alleged that deaths among the tribe are five times as great as among their white neighbors.

Senator JOHNSON and Representative SWING were refused access to the Red Cross report on Indian disease, to which I called attention in my speech. Let me again quote the letter of one who has seen the report, a doctor who says it discloses an abhorrent state of affairs which the Indian Bureau withholds from Congress by the rule that might makes right. Commissioner Burke did not answer this letter in his three-hour speech. He did not refer to it. He did not say why he refused to permit Representatives or Senators to examine these important records in his bureau. That is the autocracy which controls the Indians by its influence on legislation and exercises its power over Congress. What answer to this letter which the commissioner ignored in his three-hour speech?

NEW YORK CITY, March 23, 1926.

HON. JAMES A. FREAR,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I address you as a member of the Indian Affairs Committee of the House and with a knowledge of your constructive wishes in Indian matters.

May I call your attention to a matter in which I believe your interest might result in inestimable benefit to the Indians?

The Red Cross in 1923 made at its own expense a very comprehensive study of Indian health conditions, at the request of Mr. Burke, the Indian Commissioner. The nurse who made this was one of the most intelligent and best-trained public-health workers that I have met. The report was delivered to the Indian Commissioner when completed, and has been suppressed by him absolutely.

It was my good fortune to see a copy of this report and to go over it in detail with the investigation; therefore I know of what I am speaking. Commissioner Burke has refused to divulge the contents of this report even after being formally requested to do so by Senator JOHNSON and Representative SWING, of California. The head of the Red Cross feels that he can not issue the report independently under these circumstances.

The report has been suppressed because it went in frankness and detail far beyond anything stated in my communication to Science. It revealed concretely and descriptively the unanswerable conditions of neglect and abuse and ignorance in Government service that would shock the whole medical profession and the humanitarian world of the United States if they were made known.

A considerable sum of money contributed by the American citizens to the Red Cross permitted the study which was made in the interest of humanity and relief from suffering and ill health, and yet there is only one way, so far as we can see, by which the Indian Bureau can be compelled to yield up this valuable piece of work carried out by the Red Cross as a public service, and that is to have the Indian Affairs Committee of Congress or the proposed special joint committee demand the report and publish it.

Sincerely yours,

HAVEN EMERSON, M. D.,
President Indian Defense Association,
Professor Public Health Administration,
Columbia University, New York City.

Let me say that I understand Doctor Emerson is not only highly regarded as the former health chief of New York City but he has been of great help to the Indians of America. His statement that neither Senators nor Members of Congress can pry loose information from Commissioner Burke makes any statement by Mr. Burke in defense of his own bureau of little value. I have submitted a resolution asking that the bureau be investigated. That resolution of investigation would bring light on the management of this ossified branch of governmental bureaucracy.

I do not intend to repeat many charges of neglect of Indians who are suffering from disease. Some of these were cited in my speech of March 4, but when the bureau refuses to permit inspection of the Red Cross Indian report a statement of conditions reported in my own State and California is proper to indicate the necessity for investigation by Congress based on the following reports.

Dr. C. A. Harper, State health officer of Wisconsin, with whom I have been personally acquainted for over 20 years, a man who possesses the confidence of the people of that State and a medical officer of high authority, says regarding the Indian tribes in Wisconsin:

The reservations are filled with the most prevalent contagious and infectious diseases; that they are infecting the white communities, and that the laws are such that the State health officers are not allowed to do anything about it.

It should be stated that Wisconsin is one of the few States that has recently taken up medical assistance for the Indian tribes, and last year it devoted $16,000 of State funds for immediate medical aid for the 11,000 Indians of our State.

I do not believe a stronger statement can be found than that put forth by Drs. Allen F. Gillihan and Alma B. Schafer, representing the California State board, who were appointed by the governor to make a survey of the conditions of the Indians of California. In a report covering over 80 pages, complete and definite in character throughout, this California commission concluded by saying that—

The conclusions which have been arrived at will be found to be almost identical with those arrived at by other investigators. Recommendations which were offered will be found to differ from those of the experts in so far only as the expressions of the general practitioner differ from those of a specialist.

The commission concludes:

As the result of two months' sojourn and field study among the Indians of northeastern California, the following conclusions have been reached:

1. That the ill treatment of the Indians (of California) during the past 70 years has resulted in reducing the population from over 100,000 to about 17,300 (which is the figure just obtained from the 1920 census report).
2. That the Indians are now living a hand-to-mouth existence:
 - a. In houses not fit to live in.
 - b. Upon land that is useless.
 - c. Without water.
3. That they are not receiving an education worthy of the name.
4. That a great deal of sickness exists among them, and they are receiving absolutely no care.
5. That they are not receiving any advice, assistance, or encouragement in their business dealings with the outside world or in the personal side of their lives or in the lives and health of their families.

Heretofore statements have been submitted regarding inexcusable neglect of education by the Indian Bureau in specific cases.

I have received many communications from various States emphasizing the widespread character of diseases among the Indians of various tribes and the incapacity and lack of effort of the present bureau system to arrest the march of disease, or to save the Indians from its ravages.

Manifestly it would be unfair to charge any bureau or any officials with sole responsibility for these conditions, but when it clearly appears from the record that Indians sadly in need of medical help are neglected by the bureau, and their property, as in the case of the Navajos, Pueblos, and Yumas and other tribes, is being used for tourist bridges for white pleasure seekers and for equally unwarranted diversion of their funds in irrigation schemes and highways for the benefit largely of white population, then the necessity for abolishing existing Indian control is apparent.

The commissioner ignored the very grave charge of abuses at Taos and Zuni Pueblos. Is this an admission of the charges, and if so, are they to him unimportant?

INDIAN HEALTH APPROPRIATIONS

The Indian Bureau propaganda service has been advertising great increases in the medical and health service for Indians. Considering that the number of Indians suffering from infectious trachoma, which leads to blindness, is 70,000, according to Indian Bureau figures (the ratio of infected cases to the number examined having been established in California, Arizona, and New Mexico), such an increase surely is needed. What we find really happening behind this cloud of propaganda:

Beginning page 391 of the hearings of the House Appropriations Committee on the appropriation bill of 1927, we find the Indian Bureau, through Assistant Commissioner Meritt, requesting not an increase but a reduction in the appropriation for relieving distress and preventing disease among Indians. The net reduction asked is $15,000. The amount asked for all medical, dental, and special nursing services, as well as the supervisory salaries, totals $83,260 for 1927, exactly the same amount as Congress actually granted for 1925-26. That amount of money is requested for diagnostic, preventive, medical, surgical, dental, and ophthalmic and nursing treatment of 350,000 Indians distributed over an area of 100,000 square miles.

Assistant Commissioner Meritt states, with modesty, on page 396:

The reduction for 1927 will not permit any considerable expansion of the present work.

Such are the facts. Yet the whole country has been led to believe by a falsifying propaganda that the Indian Bureau has enormously expanded and is proposing still further to expand its facilities for diagnosis and treatment of Indian disease and for preventive work and health education among the Indians. What about the 70,000 cases of trachoma? The Indian Bureau claims that preliminary operations have been performed on 8,455 cases, yet this trachoma record is the Indian Bureau's best record when dealing with any phase of Indian disease.

THE CHARGES IGNORED

At this point let me say that I do not intend to repeat many complaints received by me against the Indian Bureau, some of which have been set forth in prior speeches but which were not referred to by Commissioner Burke in his lengthy speech before the committee. Other complaints sent me of serious character were not mentioned in my speeches of March 4 and March 23. They are proper subjects for consideration by an investigating committee, although I am not assuming they are without two sides to every controversy. Commissioner Burke failed to answer these charges. They were set forth definitely by the Menomonee Indians of my own State; by the Pueblos of New Mexico; by the Flatheads, Blackfeet, and others of Montana; by the Klamath tribes and others; all ignored or briefly referred to in Commissioner Burke's speech.

In justice to the Indian Bureau, the commissioner should invite an investigation rather than depend upon a speech in justification or defense of the charges I have submitted. It will be noted that practically all of these charges I have set forth are independent of any action by the American Indian Defense Association. That society's work more than any other agency has been useful and active in trying to secure the defeat of two objectionable bills, one relating to Indian courts, and the other to the Indian oil leasing bill.

THE INDIAN BUREAU'S "COURT" BILL

Neither of these bills will again be discussed at length. The Indian Bureau's court bill H. R. 7826, which I am informed was handed by bureau officials to a member of the Indian Affairs Committee for introduction, was considered in my speech of March 4.

Briefly, the bill seeks to perpetuate the notorious Indian courts and give them a legal status which the bureau has never before attempted to do.

As stated by Indian Commissioner Burke, the Secretary of the Interior now makes rules and regulations that may be as drastic and sweeping as the laws of the Medes and Persians. He makes law, a function that Congress and State legislatures usually perform.

Commissioner Burke appoints the local Indian agents, some of whom are known by records of past scandals, while others are like the agent among the Navajos, who gave his version of Chee Dodge's thoughts, or the saintly agent at Lac du Flambeau, who was polite and kind to his ball and chain prisoners, or the Fort Peck agent, who never saw the chains that tripped him up.

Commissioner Burke's Indian agents appoint $10 a month judges, whose "court records" they or the agents keep, and when Indian culprits infringe on the Burke rules and regulations hereafter to be promulgated by him, then the jail or work pile, with ball and chain in some cases.

From H. R. 7826, the bureau bill, again I quote:

SEC. 2. The reservation courts of Indian offenses shall have jurisdiction, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, over offenses committed by Indians on Indian reservations for which no punishment is provided by Federal law: Provided, That any one sentence of said courts shall not exceed six months' imprisonment or a fine of $100, or both.

The reservation court provided in the bureau bill is the $10 a month "judge" appointed by the local Indian agent.

No process is needed to arrest. Moore was kidnapped at his own home, 70 miles distant, according to the affidavits, and brought back to the reservation before a $10 a month "judge," who could not speak, read, or write the English language. The agent did it for him. No jury is permitted for the accused, whose constitutional right under the sixth amendment is ignored. No provision for compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor or to have the assistance of counsel for his defense, as provided by the same constitutional amendment, is to be found in the law asked for. No right to bail or to an appeal is afforded the Indian, yet all these are constitutional rights guaranteed to every American citizen.

The Fort Peck and Lac du Flambeau "courts" are typical of what will be found on Indian reservations generally if H. R. 7826 is passed and the laws, rules, and regulations expounded by Commissioner Burke for the government of 240,000 Indian wards of our Government will be the code of crimes for the $10 a month "judges." Rights of citizenship, rights of liberty, rights of property, rights to a fair trial by jury with attorney, excepting in eight Federal court offenses have been denied the Indian since the Indian Bureau was established. This practice is to be legalized.

Now, Congress, after a century or more of illegal procedure, is asked by the Indian Bureau to hand down a law, unconstitutional and unprecedented in this or any other country, that will give some color for the practice of fastening mental and physical handcuffs everlastingly on the Indian wards of the Government.

INDIANS PRACTICALLY UNANIMOUS AGAINST THE BUREAU COURT LAW

Every Indian tribe represented in Washington protested at the hearing on this bill, with the single exception of some Sioux Indians from South Dakota, the home of Commissioner Burke. A white attorney approved by Commissioner Burke, who has a claim against the Government of $200,000,000, said he was authorized to speak for the bill by the Sioux from South Dakota. Letters from other Sioux Indians have been received protesting against the bill, that repudiates or refuses to the Indians constitutional rights given every other American citizen.

To show the methods of Indian Bureau opposition that depended entirely on one white attorney under obligations to Mr. Burke, I submit extracts from a letter received by me from Carlos Gallineaux, secretary of the Rosebud General Council, which Attorney Case pretended to represent. Under date April 20, 1926, Mr. Gallineaux writes me as secretary of the Rosebud General Council:

WOOD, S. DAK., April 30, 1926.

Hon. JAMES A. FREAR,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have the honor to call your attention to the H. R. bill 7826, introduced by Congressman LEAVITT on the 16th of January, 1926, to extend the civil and criminal laws of the United States to Indians, and for other purposes.

I was a member of the Rosebud Sioux delegation from South Dakota that appeared on two different occasions in the hearings held on this bill in February, 1926. We had our attorney with us on one occasion. Maj. Ralph H. Case, of Washington, D. C., was the attorney who represented us on one hearing. At that time we were not in favor of the bill as it was introduced originally. We offered several amendments to the bill, but I do not know if they were recorded. However, the original bill did not have our approval. . . .

We are with you in your fight for the rights of the Indians and hope that I could have a chance to appear as a witness for you on tribal expense.

Very respectfully,

CARLOS GALLINEAUX.

As if to show the unmitigated fraud perpetrated on this Indian tribe by Attorney Case, who pretended to represent the Sioux Indians, I quote further a long protest sent to me signed by 47 adult Indians from White River, S. Dak., Rosebud Indian Reservation, which says:

WHITE RIVER, S. DAK., April 9, 1926.

We, the undersigned, are Rosebud Sioux Indians and bona fide residents of the Little White River district on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, do hereby unanimously oppose the passage of the H. R. 7826, known as Leavitt bill, because the effects of this resolution will cause a detrimental change to the progress of our race. At the same time we are unanimously in favor of the passage of H. R. 9315, known as the Frear bill, because we know that the effects of this resolution will improve the progress of our race. Thereby the declaration of Congress that Indians are citizens of the United States will be fulfilled and justified. Heretofore we had the name of citizens of the United States, but have no constitutional rights.

I assumed Case spoke with some authority for the Indian Bureau and Sioux Indians when favoring the passage of H. R. 7826. It is needless to say I have in no way suggested these or communications received from the Sioux Indians protesting against the Indian Bureau $10 a month Dark Ages Indian judge bills. The letters show conclusively Indian Bureau methods of procedure before Congress.

I leave this measure without further discussion as an expression of the feelings toward these Indian wards of the Government thus evidenced by the present Indian Bureau. No further discussion will be offered here of a proposal covered more fully in my speech of March 4. The proposition is abhorrent to every sense of justice and right.

THE VICIOUS INDIAN OIL LEASING BILL

On March 23 I gave an extended review of the vicious Indian oil leasing bill approved by the Indian Bureau. It will not be necessary to repeat statements regarding the bill nor to analyze in detail all the statements made by Commissioner Burke on this bill that appear in his 42-printed-page speech before the Indian Committee.

As to the points of difference between Secretary of the Interior Work and Indian Commissioner Burke on their disagreement regarding the exact title possessed by the Indians of 10 States to 22,000,000 acres of Executive-order reservations, none other than the officials can speak. I have properly assumed that the act of one is the act of the other; and as the charges are impersonal, any failure to protect the rights of the Indians were charges directed alike to the responsible officials whoever they may be. The share of responsibility is unimportant. It is the lack of protection to which I made that charge against the bureau.

The oil leasing bill approved by Commissioner Burke, who appeared before the House Committee, provided that 37½ per cent of all oil royalties belonging to Indians in 22,000,000 acres of Executive-order reservations should be paid to the State in which the land is located—in lieu of taxes. The oil companies were exempted from paying production taxes in the original bill. The average Indian oil tax rate on treaty reservation is about 3 per cent, or one-twelfth of the rate provided in H. R. 9133, which the commissioner approved. The commissioner stated, I assume correctly, that he was only willing to approve 20 of the old Secretary Fall permits and two or three other claims that had strong equities, based on expenditures by oil operators. The House bill and the Senate bill, however, both propose to recognize any of the 475 oil-leasing applications filed during the Fall régime, which in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior he desires to reinstate. What is the Indian Bureau's attitude on the bill as amended?

The effect of this latter provision, if 475 applications are reinstated, is to make some 300,000 acres of Indian lands subject to a 5 per cent royalty, or less than one-half royalty privileges given on treaty reservations, which have a minimum rate of 12½ per cent. The full number of applications, if reinstated, would cover over 1,000,000 acres of Indian reservation lands, based on action taken under Secretary Fall's illegal order.

LAST YEAR'S OIL BILL IS REMEMBERED

An amendment in the House bill's tax provision is noted. Last session the same situation arose and the House conferees then adopted the Senate 37½ per cent in-lieu-of-tax provision. The facts briefly stated relate first to an order made on June 9, 1922, by Albert B. Fall, then Secretary of the Interior, in which he declared that lands given to the Indians by Executive order are "owned by the United States" and subject to the public leasing act. Under the act of February 25, 1920, he received applications from oil prospectors that according to Commissioner Burke's testimony before the committee reached about 475 in number covering, as stated, a possible total of over 1,000,000 acres of Indian reservation. On May 27, 1924, Attorney General Harlan F. Stone, at the request of the President and Secretary Work, rendered an exhaustive opinion with the conclusion that the leasing act of 1920 does not apply to Executive-order Indian reservations as ruled by Secretary Fall in 1922.

The concluding paragraph of that opinion states that no difference exists in title between Indian treaty reservations and Executive-order reservations. It says:

Neither the courts nor Congress have made any distinction as to the character or extent of the Indian rights as between Executive-order reservations and reservations established by treaty or act of Congress. So that if the general leasing act applies to one class there seems to be no ground for holding that it does not apply to others. You are therefore advised that the leasing act of 1920 does not apply to Executive-order Indian reservations. (Harlan F. Stone, Attorney General.)

The full opinion with numerous citations is quoted in my speech of March 4.

Commissioner Burke says he has always contended that the Indian rights on Executive-order reservations are practically the same as rights under treaty reservations, and he furnished in his speech of April 10 a letter to Secretary Work under date of March 31, 1923, a few days after his appointment as Secretary to that effect, quoting the act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, that provides Indian allotments may be made on treaty, congressional, or Executive reservations, and asking that it be referred to the Solicitor for the Interior Department. His letter calls attention to the brief of the Indian Rights Association on the same subject.

This association is entitled to much credit for urging responsible officials to act for the protection of Indians as set forth in the testimony of Witness Brosius quoted in my speech of March 23.

Commissioner Burke in the oil-bill hearings said:

The Attorney General has held that the general leasing law does not apply. It is the opinion of a great lawyer, that is all. The United States Court in Utah has held otherwise. The court of appeals . . . has certified it to the Supreme Court . . . and we have here a very elaborate opinion by Secretary Fall in the Harrison case in which he held that the general leasing law did apply.

Commissioner Burke adds he thinks the general leasing law does not apply.

Thereafter he said:

This suit [Harrison's] is to be dismissed on the passage of this bill. That will be the end of the legislation. They surrender if we pass this bill. That bill has been worked over for many weeks and it is here as a compromise in the situation.

Commissioner Burke then recommended the allowance of 22 claims but said 475 applications had been filed. He does not say how an allowance of 22 claims would settle or satisfy about 450 other applicants. The question would still be open unless properly settled. There is one sure way to settle it, however.

THE RIGHT WAY TO PROTECT THE INDIANS

When Secretary Work assumed his duties in 1923 he appointed a Committee of One Hundred to make investigations and recommendations on Indian matters. The Committee of One Hundred passed unanimously the following resolution:

We recommend that the Secretary of the Interior suspend all departmental proceedings touching the sale or lease of oil, gas, or minerals on or from Executive-order Indian reservations pending action by the Congress to vest the title of said reservations in the Indians occupying them.

That should encourage the Secretary to offer curative legislation. Acting pursuant to the same end in their report of 1924 the Board of Indian Commissioners, appointed by the President, reported, page 10:

We would respectfully suggest that a bill be introduced in Congress providing for securing to the Indian occupants titles to the lands included in Executive-order reservations so as to make Executive-order reservations identical in character with reservations established by treaties or by congressional enactment. This is one of the recommendations made by the advisory council on Indian affairs.

No action appears to have come from the Secretary of the Interior, to whom both communications were addressed, or from the Indian Commissioner, who represents more particularly the Indians now holding 22,000,000 acres of Executive-order reservations.

Because of that fact I introduced H. R. 10199 on March 10, which provided:

That with respect to all Executive-order reservations or withdrawals for Indians the vested rights of Indians shall be hereafter recognized as being in all respects identical with the vested rights of Indians on reservations created by treaty.

SEC. 2. That from and after June 9, 1922, changes in boundaries of Executive-order reservations shall be subject to the exclusive control of Congress in all respects identical with existing law applicable to changes of boundaries of reservations created by treaty.

This bill was prepared to carry out the opinion of the Attorney General, which declared the Indian reservation titles were all the same. My bill also carried out the recommendation of the Committee of One Hundred referred to. The bill also carried out the above recommendation of the Board of Indian Commissioners. The bill sought to protect the rights of Indians.

THE DEPARTMENT AND BUREAU REFUSED TO APPROVE PROTECTION FOR THE INDIANS

When in the usual course of Indian Committee procedure the bill was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior a report was received by the committee, whether dictated by the Interior Department or Indian Bureau is uncertain, but it was signed by Secretary Work, to the effect that the bill's passage was not recommended because the matter is in litigation.

The refusal of the Department of the Interior to permit the bill validating the Executive-order reservation titles to have a favorable recommendation speaks for itself.

It is recognized that large oil interests are here protesting against anything that clouds the title of the applicants under the Fall order. The Secretary of the Interior also has a dual responsibility to private parties, to the Government, and to the Indians; but if so, he should be relieved from a supervision of Indian affairs if Indians' rights are of secondary consideration.

I have tried briefly to set out the refusal of the Secretary of the Interior to aid in perfecting title to Executive-order reservations in the Indians. Yet it is significant that Commissioner Burke, for the alleged purpose of perfecting title, however futile, seeks to pass the Indian oil leasing bill to secure a settlement of suits that challenge Indian titles.

Do the Indian Commissioner and Secretary of the Interior work harmoniously? If so, how can the Hayden bill, which, according to Commissioner Burke, is to "settle" matters, be acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior, while my own bill for the same purpose, but more definite, is objectionable to him? One is illogical and of no avail for the purpose ostensibly sought, yet it gets the Secretary's O. K. The other bill is clear and unequivocal to make certain all reservation Indian rights, yet it is rejected.

This is the objectionable Indian oil leasing bill more fully referred to in speeches of March 4 and March 23. It indicates a willingness on the part of the official guardians of Indians to refuse to assert Indian rights or claims. When it is remembered the oil leasing bill was reported without the testimony of a single Indian of all the thousands interested, it is only an index of other treatment to which I have referred, although this bill, involving untold millions of dollars of Indian oil leases, is one of the most important bills affecting Indian rights ever placed before Congress.

WHAT THE OIL HEARINGS SHOW

Mr. Burke gave a large portion of his address to vehement statements repudiating criticisms of the oil leasing bill and the bureau's attitude on that bill. An analysis of the bill hereafter covers the subject and answers Mr. Burke fully. I do not care to split hairs, but repeat charges of Indian Bureau approval of a vicious Indian oil bill that would have defrauded them if passed in its original form approved by the bureau.

First. The Indian Bureau or responsible department has been shown to be opposed to any curative legislation as to Indian titles that are claimed by oil men to be in controversy. It refused to have introduced any bill for that purpose as recommended, and disapproved my own bill introduced for the same purpose, as stated.

Second. The commissioner claims the oil bill as introduced taxes all producers. On the contrary, in Commissioner Burke's presence (p. 43, hearings), from the introducer of the bill:

Mr. HAYDEN. Under the terms of this bill the State will only receive 37½ per cent of the 12½ per cent royalty; so that the State may not receive as much as it would from a tax on the total production.

. . . As stated in the conference report last year, the amendment to the original text of the bill substitutes a definite share in the bonuses, rentals, and royalties from the oil, gas, coal, etc., for the right to tax the production of minerals granted to the State by the House amendment. . . .

Mr. FREAR. I did not understand that you took the tax all out of the Indians. Why should you not take it from the man who receives the benefit of the oil?

Mr. HAYDEN. The answer made last year was that when the producer makes his bid on the lease he knows what the tax will be, and he bids higher for the lease. . . .

Mr. FREAR. . . . In view of what has been said by Mr. HAYDEN, would it be as satisfactory to you, providing an agreement could be had that the Executive-order reservation (22,000,000 acres covered by the oil leasing bill) be placed on a parity with the treaty reservation so that the State could tax the oil received from the wells?

Commissioner BURKE. You are raising a question that I can not answer except to keep faith by saying that this bill is a result of compromise. . . .

Practically every witness and member of the committee then present took the position that the State could not tax oil production on Indian lands without special legislation therefor. That bill without any such special legislation provided was then receiving the approval of the Indian Bureau.

Third. The Indian Bureau, through its commissioner who testified, approved the passage of the oil bill that took 37½ per cent of all Indian oil royalties in lieu of taxes, or twelve times the average tax on treaty reservations.

Fourth. The Indian Bureau brought a white witness over 2,000 miles to say to the Senate committee that members of an Indian tribe would consent to give 50 per cent of their oil royalties, if necessary, to the State in lieu of taxes.

Fifth. The Indian Bureau has not protested before the Indian Committee that reported the House oil leasing bill, against its allowance by amendment of upward of 475 claims in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior that would give only 5 per cent royalty on possibly 300,000 acres of Indian oil lands. These matters were discussed more fully in other speeches and are not reiterated for that reason.

The failure of the Indian Bureau can not be overlooked for not attempting to secure consent to the bill or attendance of at least one Indian from some of the many Indian tribes living in 10 States wherein the 22,000,000 acres of Executive-order lands affected by the bill were looted.

The charges made against the official guardian of the Indians that he approved an oil bill which discriminated unjustly against the Indians covering untold millions, can not reasonably be questioned, based on the hearings and the bill as introduced.

In this connection I am advised by one who claims to have examined the record, that about 30 days after securing his oil permit from Secretary Fall, Harrison, in whose name the Indian title suit is now pending, assigned his oil rights to the Midwest Oil Co., a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co. That the Standard Oil Co. in this case, and probably many others of the 475 cases affecting over 1,000,000 acres of Indian oil lands, is the real party in interest. An investigation would disclose the facts.

THE RECORD CALLS FOR A CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION

Evidence that invites a thorough investigation of the present archaic handling of the Indian problem has been presented. Facts submitted and others of like character are offered for the use of the proposed committee of investigation.

A half dozen witnesses of unimpeachable character have placed their emphatic condemnation of the Navajo bridge travesty recommended by the Indian Bureau. The importance of this case lies in the fact that a new policy occurs in recommendations for reimbursement from Indian funds for projects of little if any use to the Indians without their consent. Without knowledge of this misuse of their funds the Indians were and are defenseless.

In like manner, the Jackson Barnett case that was a plain unwarranted mismanagement and misuse of an individual Indian's property amounting to over $1,000,000, discloses the helplessness of Indian heirs when the Indian Bureau can refuse to recognize any relatives or descendants, but gives away Indian property even of a half wit to any person or any society of its choice without restriction. No court proceeding ordinarily can intervene to prevent this control under existing law.

The Wisconsin Indian ball-and-chain case is of especial importance because with full knowledge of the punishment inflicted the Indian Commissioner declares it should have been more severe. Four affidavits are practically undisputed as to the facts of this inhuman treatment. Fort Peck's ball-and-chain case is of the same general character according to the communication appearing in my speech of March 4. The efforts of Commissioner Burke and Assistant Commissioner Meritt to smother the facts is more reprehensible than the illegal punishment so far as humane intelligent administration of Indian affairs is involved. These efforts are set forth in affidavits here submitted.

No excuse and no explanation has been offered or can be offered for the neglect of health conditions among the Indians set forth in my speech of March 4 and briefly referred to in evidence submitted with these remarks. It is not the Indian Bureau alone that is responsible, but Congress with knowledge of the facts now permits this inhuman treatment and mistreatment to exist in our land.

The Indian $10 a month judge bill, based on illegal existing practice, is a travesty on justice that would never be allowed to exist or control in any other country however ignorant or autocratic. I saw criminal trials in several courts in Russia where judges trying misdemeanors gave as careful consideration to the facts as in the average court of similar jurisdiction in other countries visited, and right of appeal was given to defendants; but these Indian "courts" are hereafter to maintain by criminal procedure the rules and regulations announced from time to time by the Indian Bureau or Department. No rights whatever are given to the defendant, and yet we have vested him or her with American citizenship accompanied by constitutional rights that are brazenly ignored under existing practice and also by the proposed bureau law.

Ball-and-chain treatment is of comparatively slight importance when in force on occasional reservations compared with a drastic un-American criminal procedure proposed by the bureau with which to fasten its everlasting control on every Indian on every reservation in the land who fails to surrender himself and his property to this new agency dictatorship without legal supervision.

The Indian oil leasing bill has been recited at some length in the different speeches in an effort to prevent gross injustice being imposed on many thousands of Indians owning the 22,000,000 acres of Executive-order lands. If the guardians of the Indians will consent to such bills and give to them their approval, what chance of securing justice is had by the Indians or Indian tribes when practically all of the control of Indian property is carried on without publicity and without knowledge on the part of the owner of its use or misuse?

UNIQUE CONTROL OF PROPERTY FOUND IN NO OTHER COUNTRY

Where in all history will be found efforts to control by legislation the property of thousands of wards when not one of these is called as a witness to appear or testify in his own behalf on the oil leasing bill? Yet thousands of Indians declared "incompetent," I am informed, are graduates of schools or of universities and possess a good understanding of business. All these thousands under the orders of the Indian Bureau may be continued to the end of their days as "incompetent" to manage their own property and no court can aid them under existing law.

I can not permit to go unchallenged the assault on the American Defense Association by Commissioner Burke and his bureau associates. I have met some of these officials and officers of different welfare organizations interested in the Indians. They are earnest, conscientious people who have no ends to serve excepting to relieve the Indians and protect them from the evils of bureaucratic control which, in the words of Representative KELLY, of Pennsylvania, appears to be the sole end of the Indian Bureau's Indian control.

Secretary Collier is a man of exceptional ability, whose nominal compensation, according to my understanding of its amount, is pitiable compared with the work he does for his association. In fact, the total receipts and expenditures of his organization for general work hardly exceed a Congressman's salary. These facts he tried to state to the committee, which would not hear them after Commissioner Burke's speech. His efforts to defeat the Indian judge bill and Indian oil leasing bill entitle him to the gratitude of every Indian and of every American who believes in a square deal. Secretary Collier does not question the desirability of a just oil leasing bill and one has been introduced by myself that deals fairly with both Indians and oil prospectors.

In like manner Mr. Collier appeared before the Judiciary Committee urging a jurisdictional bill introduced by myself that gives to Indians the same legal rights accorded other citizens subject to differing conditions on Indian reservations, and also gives to defendants the precious right of appeal, ignored in the Indian Bureau bill. Federal and State laws and not Indian Bureau rules and regulations are provided as the standard of government of Indians by that bill and for such violations alone are punishments to be imposed.

To Doctor Emerson; Secretary Collier; Mrs. Atwood, whose expenses in the latter case are paid by a relative; and to hundreds of other sincere workers in the cause of Indian welfare the country owes a debt of gratitude for their efforts to prevent a worse national scandal than now exists in our mismanagement of our Indian wards and their property.

I am not seeking any victim to punish for the mistreatment of the Indians, but I would be untrue to my duty as a Member of this House if I failed to acquaint you with the facts here presented. If I am able to call attention to our dismal failure in administering the affairs of the American Indians, now American citizens, and if I can help place before the Indians a hope of better opportunities to equip themselves for citizenship, the effort will have been worth while. Recommendations by Francis Leupp, Sells, and other former commissioners that I have studied point out methods for raising the standards of Indians, and I am sure that a careful study by disinterested students of the subject will speedily suggest a constructive program which should at once be undertaken for the fulfillment of our duty and responsibilities to the Indians.

Practically every Senator and Member who has expressed himself to me as to the aims and purposes of the Indian Bureau finds no hope of improvement in that direction, because, as stated repeatedly, any bureau that seeks to perpetuate bureaucratic control has a singleness of purpose toward that selfish end.

After 70 years of such Indian control I submit the end is not in sight for centuries to come if we continue the present hopeless, aimless policy. Every other race has been able within a brief period to become fitted for duties of citizenship. It is preposterous that American Indians can not become equally competent to perform their part if given opportunity.

For this reason I have set forth facts that demand on behalf of the Indians an investigation by the American Congress. From that investigation is reasonably certain to come not alone condemnation of present practices that are indefensible in our treatment of the Indians but constructive plans that will relieve us from frequent Indian Bureau scandals. Of far more importance, such plans should give to 240,000 Indians, now nominally on the road to full control of their property and of full citizenship, a practical hope of early emancipation from the mental and physical ball-and-chain treatment with which we have hampered their progress for a half century.

IN ANSWER TO MR. BURKE'S SPEECH ON THE PIMAS AND THE INDIAN OIL-LEASING SCANDAL

I desire to discuss briefly this matter, to which Commissioner Burke gave so much attention.

Commissioner Burke, on April 10, addressing the House Indian Affairs Committee, violently attacked the American Indian Defense Association (Inc.) for making the Pima and oil-leasing charges. The association requested to be heard in reply, as I have stated. The General Federation of Women's Clubs, through Mrs. H. A. Atwood, its Indian welfare chairman, and Mrs. Kate Trenholm Abrams, its legislative vice chairman, joined in the demand that a hearing be granted, because the federation's Indian welfare chairman had made charges substantially identical with those which Commissioner Burke denounced as falsehoods.

The Indian Affairs Committee refused both organizations, and closed the hearing with no witness heard save Commissioner Burke. Therefore Commissioner Burke's denials appear uncriticized in the printed record of hearings.

On this account I desire further, based on information in my hands, to give additional data on Indian Bureau oppression of Indians, Indian Bureau, mishandling of Indian property, Indian Bureau neglect of Indian disease, Indian Bureau suppression of public documents, Indian Bureau campaign of defamation against the Indians, and the record of Commissioner Burke.

THE DEATHS OF THE PIMAS

The Pima case is definite, and it has been made much of in Commissioner Burke's speech in the hearings.

A telegram from Rev. Dr. Dirk Lay, now and for 16 years past a Presbyterian missionary among the Pimas, is as follows:

CASA GRANDE, ARIZ., April 12, 1926.—My statements made before Senate subcommittee are absolutely true, and we can easily prove them, and my narrative about delay in construing law, Senate 966, is true. Meritt told me that conditions pertaining to white lands must be met before construction work on Coolidge Dam could be started, and on February 15 the bill was referred to the Solicitor of the Interior Department for an opinion, or nearly two years after the bill became a law. Louis C. Hill, builder of the Roosevelt Dam, and Fred A. Noetzli, one of the leading engineers and the greatest authority on arch dams in the world, deemed inadequate. Page 408 House hearings on Interior Department appropriation bill, the statement regarding houses is made. There are not 75 homes with wooden floors. This can also be easily proved by check of reservation. Indications are that reports for this year will show larger death rate than last year.

DIRK LAY.

Doctor Lay's statement that—there are not 75 homes with wooden floors—

refers to a claim by Assistant Commissioner Meritt which appears on page 408, House Appropriations Committee hearings for the fiscal year 1927, where the statement is made that—1,020 families have permanent homes with wooden floors.

The Reverend Doctor Lay's death chart did not suddenly appear week before last. That chart, on a larger scale and with a complete statement of the Pima case, was displayed at a forum meeting attended by Indian Bureau personnel, among others, March 8 last, at which I was present. Doctor Lay was many weeks in this city after his allegations had been made public, and it would have been fitting for the Indian Bureau to challenge the man who has fought this Pima fight, and not when he was 2,000 miles away. The proof is all on record.

Commissioner Burke's denial, based on an unproved allegation about statistical neglects in 1924, and stated to have been corrected through statistical assiduity in 1925, is unresponsive. In 1921 the Bureau of Indian Affairs allotted a certain number of living Indians. Presumably it did not allot dead Indians. If it did, then fraud by the bureau is manifest. It is Senator ASHURST, I understand, not Mrs. Atwood, of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, nor Doctor Lay, who presented on March 11, this year, to the Senate Appropriations Committee the following statement:

In 1921 the Government allotted 4,890 Pima Indians; 1,106 of these have since died.

The death chart, whose publication appears to have shocked the commissioner and the Indian Bureau, deals with one section of the Pima land, and it is again a chart of the Indians allotted in 1921 and the Indians dead before January 1, 1926. This means a Pima death rate of 59 per thousand, compared with the white death rate of 12 per thousand.

It will be evident that to allege a delinquency of census in 1924, as corrected by a more careful census in 1925, does not touch the allegations of Senator ASHURST and Doctor Lay. I believe these facts will be sustained by the files of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the files of the present superintendent of the Pima Indians, Mr. Faris, admittedly one of the ablest and most exact men in the bureau service. I call your attention, especially, to the last sentence of Doctor Lay's telegram, which, if accurate, warrants in itself the investigation I have asked.

Commissioner Burke does not claim that this devastating mortality was caused by epidemic disease and not, as alleged, by slow starvation and heartbreak. He can not allege it with any support from bureau records or records of the Arizona Board of Health or any other record, I am informed the report of the Red Cross on Indian diseases and neglect, which was suppressed by the Indian Bureau, fully reveals the startling mortality among the Pima Indians.

THE CHARGE OF INDIAN STARVATION

Of course, Commissioner Burke knows something about the subject of starvation. He is aware that people who die of starvation do not simply vanish into eternity through the lack of yesterday morning's meal. Commissioner Burke knows that chronic undernourishment, by destroying organic resistance, leads to death through a myriad of infections and organic collapses which a nourished body is immune against. I do not contend he would willfully neglect these starving Indians. I would be failing in my duty as a legislator if I failed to give the facts.

The history of California's Indians presents, I am informed, a similar condition, accepted by ethnologists as having largely caused the appalling destruction of California Indian life during the period of Indian Bureau guardianship. And by that we may understand that hopelessness and heartbreak, added to slow starvation, can kill Pima Indians and has killed them and is killing them as well as in California.

PROOF OF THE DELAYS IS SUBMITTED

As to the nature of the delays among the Pimas, Congress voted five and one-half millions of dollars in the spring of 1924 to put water on the Pima lands. That authorizing act was passed in 1924. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars became available for expenditure March 4, 1925. During that whole preceding session of Congress—the short session of 1924-25—the Indian Bureau knew that the appropriation was certain to be forthcoming. These facts I learned from personal conversations with Reverend Doctor Lay, the Pima missionary, when he was in Washington.

Now, one year passed after the appropriation became available and not a bucket of concrete was poured. That is the fact of delay as to the date when the charges affecting the Pimas was publicly voiced in Washington. What had happened in the interim?

The Indian Bureau failed, I am informed, to obtain from the Interior Department's solicitor a construction of the law. Some clerk in the office caused Mr. Meritt to get an impression that nothing could be done until contracts had been negotiated with white users of the surplus water, and that would take a long, long time. What date finally did the Interior Department solicitor obtain from the Indian Office the act and a request for its construction? I am informed February, 1926. If the statement is challenged and the testimony of the Reverend Doctor Lay is deemed insufficient, I refer to the Republican Senator from Arizona or the Department of the Interior solicitor.

The solicitor took less than a week to render his opinion when asked for it. As a matter of fact, no question of construction was really involved.

ENGINEERING DELAYS

There is no criticism, I am informed, of the engineering staff of the Indian Bureau or Department of the Interior. It is competent, it is on the job, ready to start the Pima work, for nearly a year gone by.

The two consultants named in Doctor Lay's telegram passed on the plans of the bureau's engineers. Concerning them and their work the record is found in the hearings of the Subcommittee on Appropriations of the Senate. That these men are eminent engineers none has questioned. That they were disinterested none has questioned. But the Secretary of the Interior decided that they worked too cheap; they were only paid $20 a day, giving their services partly as a labor of pity and a service to their country. Hence the added delay, due to the Secretary of the Interior's insistence that a bill should be passed February, 1926, authorizing higher payments to consulting engineers, whose consultation proceeds henceforward.

Commissioner Burke stated that the Secretary of the Interior would have been "censured" to have allowed construction to proceed on the basis of his own engineers' plans plus the reports of these two eminent consultants. Then Secretary Work should have moved the 1924-25 session of Congress to obtain the authority which thus tardily he has obtained to pay larger sums for consultants. The situation was fearful then as now. It was fearful a year ago as it is now. Construction was impending then as now.

CHARGES ARE PROVED

I understand these are the facts; and on their basis, taken separately and together, the first charge made is repeated.

The Pima Indians lost their water through negligence. They have died through recent years at a sensational and terrible rate from slow starvation and hopelessness. Congress was not derelict; it acted generously. The Indian Bureau was derelict.

Nowhere, to my knowledge, has anyone charged that the Indian Bureau is seeking to delay operations while the areas of land owned by dead Pimas multiply until they constitute most of all the Pima lands, while the Pimas die. Nowhere has it been charged that the Indian Bureau is seeking to cause white interests to inherit the land of an exterminated Pima tribe. Such will be the effect, however, of indefinitely continued delays, nor is there in the past record of the bureau any assurance against indefinite further delay. But no sinister motive need be ascribed.

THE OIL-LEASING SCANDAL

I have charged that Commissioner Burke indorsed and urged the passage of H. R. 9133 and S. 3159. That these bills as indorsed have the following effect: (1) To deprive the Executive-order Indians of 37½ per cent of their oil revenue, giving it to the States; (2) to exempt the oil companies from the production tax; (3) to provide a congressional declaration against the Indian claim of vested rights in 22,500,000 acres, two-thirds of the undivided reservation area.

The commissioner denounced these charges. Demonstration is contained in the printed House and Senate oil hearings. Page 87, Senate hearings, it appears:

Mr. COLLIER. The Government must extend to the State the privilege of taxation before the State can act.

Senator BRATTON. There can be no doubt as to that.

Mr. COLLIER. So that if the measure should stand as it is now, no matter what the change of wording in section 2, your producer would be tax exempt; whether the words "in lieu of taxation" were left in or taken out it would not affect the status of the producer.

In the House hearings quoted on page 77, Senate hearings:

Mr. HAYDEN. The Supreme Court has passed on the taxation question specifically and directly in the Oklahoma case, that a State can not levy a tax on oil from Indian lands without the consent of the United States.

These extracts are supplementary to those I have heretofore inserted in my remarks.

The bills which Mr. Burke indorsed gave no consent to the States to tax the oil companies; the amendment striking out "in lieu of the taxes" in no wise affected the situation; Commissioner Burke's denial in this regard is refuted by the record taken as a whole and in its details. None disputed the facts through either the Senate or House hearings.

The implied congressional declaration against Indian vested right is far more serious. On April 10, before the House committee, Commissioner Burke argued in effect as follows: "The final court decision may go against the Indians. Therefore we must take what we can get." And the bill which he had recommended was one which assumed a decision by the Supreme Court completely adverse to the Indians, and then on the basis of that presumption took 37½ per cent of their royalty away from them, while exempting the oil producers from taxes. All this ignoring Attorney General Stone's opinion in reversing Secretary Fall. And more fundamentally wrong was and is the destruction of Indian vested rights. This is exhaustively presented in the Senate hearings, and it was proved that the destruction would affect not only oil royalty rights but all natural resources, soil values, and even the right of occupancy.

This matter is of first importance, because these bills, improved in some particulars, have been made decisively worse in others, and one has been reported to the House and the other is being pushed hard in the Senate, and if enacted they will be a serious blow at Indian rights.

Secretary Work's Committee of One Hundred on Indian Affairs recommended that Congress should validate the Indian title to execute reservations or vest that title in the Indians; the Board of Indian Commissioners similarly recommended; bills carrying out these recommendations have been introduced in the Senate and in the House; the Indian Bureau has promptly reported adversely on them. These matters I have discussed elsewhere in detail with recommendations which were ignored.

COMMISSIONER BURKE'S UNIQUE OIL COMPROMISE

The commissioner's plea states that he was forced on behalf of the Indians to "compromise." His "compromise" was as follows: He indorsed a bill which assumed in advance the most adverse possible decision by the higher courts against the Indians, a decision which would not be forthcoming according to the opinion of former Attorney General Stone, now on the Supreme Court bench.

Having thus presumed defeat for the Indians and the Government, the commissioner then proceeded to indorse a bill predicated on that defeat which has not taken place—a bill which has the objectionable qualities of the bill which he indorsed. Not for the Indians and not with Congress did Commissioner Burke compromise. I intend to convey no implication whatever as to whether he compromised or with whom, but he recommended a measure more profoundly destructive to Indian rights than any which has been before Congress in these score of years so far as I can learn.

That bill is now before Congress.

I have charged that in promoting this oil bill, of dominating importance to 85,000 Indians in 10 States, the Indian Bureau has neither acquainted these tribes with the facts, nor enabled them to come to Washington, nor even secured written expression from them. Yet they are the parties of first interest. Their property, their tenure, their community existence is at stake. This oil bill, hugely menacing to the Navajo and Hopi Tribes, remains unindorsed by any of their tribal councils.

When the National Council of American Indians wrote to the Navajo tribal council, transmitting a statement of facts about the oil bills and asking what that council really was indorsing, its letter promptly arrived at the desk of Commissioner Burke and no reply ever came from the Navajos.

Meantime the Pueblos, three-fifths of whose land is Executive-order reservation, have registered their corporate tribal protests by letter and wire, so I am informed by communications I have received.

I have many communications from others more familiar with actual conditions than myself, but, as stated at the outset, I have endeavored to verify every material statement, and I submit that the facts set forth entitle Congress to an investigation in order to determine what course should be pursued and what legislation adopted looking toward the advancement of our new American citizens who are not given rights of citizenship to which they are entitled.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes in order to answer what the gentleman from Wisconsin has said.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I think I should object in deference and justice to the Members who have matters on the Private Calendar. To-day was set aside especially for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and, therefore, I do not think we should extend time indefinitely on other subjects. On last Saturday the Private Calendar was supposed to have a day; for two hours they went on with some other subjects; to-day we are supposed to consider bills on the Private Calendar, and it seems to me that after an hour and three-quarters spent in discussing other matters we should begin to proceed with business on the Private Calendar. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONFERENCE REPORTS ON BRIDGE BILLS

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference reports on H. R. 8771, to extend the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Detroit River within or near the city limits of Detroit, Mich.; H. R. 8908, granting the consent of Congress to George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River; H. R. 8190, authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Colorado River near Blythe, Calif.; H. R. 8918, granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Louisiana, Mo.; H. R. 8950, granting the consent of Congress to the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Minnesota River at or near Shakopee, Minn., and H. R. 9688, granting the consent of Congress for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Sandusky Bay at or near Baybridge, Ohio. These conference reports represent an agreement between the two Houses with reference to the forms of bridge bills and I do not think it necessary to take up the time of the House to read them. So I ask unanimous consent that they be considered as read and be approved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that these conference reports, all relating to bridges and being formal in their nature, be considered together. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I have no idea of doing, I have noticed that four or five of these bills have been in considerable controversy between the House and Senate, and I take it these are the conference reports. Most of us have not been in the habit of following these bridge bills, having the impression that certain definite forms were followed and that certain rules apply. If that is true, how does it happen that the House and Senate should be in vigorous disagreement as to a number of these bills, because if the committee is not following some definite form and applying certain rules the House wants to know it, and we will have to watch these bills a little more.

Mr. DENISON. I will state to the gentleman from Michigan that there was a very marked difference in views between the committee of the Senate and the committee of the House with reference to certain policies, and those differences in views made conferences necessary on these bills. The result of the conferences has been that an agreement has been arrived at between the two Houses as to the forms of these bills, and the agreements are now embodied in these conference reports.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman in a word indicate to the House the nature of the new policy adopted for our information?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; I will be glad to do that.

The policy pertains entirely to the construction of toll bridges. We have provided in bills now that there shall be a right of recapture of privately constructed toll bridges in favor of the States or political subdivisions of the States in which or adjoining which the bridges are located, under a limited measure of compensation.

The House committee insisted that if we give a State or a city or other municipality this right of recapture of a privately owned toll bridge, under the limited measure of damages specified in the bill, when the State or the city amortizes the amount which it pays for the bridge, it then ought to make it a free bridge.

The Senate committee had a different view. They contended that when the State or the city takes over a bridge by condemnation, the State or the city ought to have the right to operate it as a toll bridge indefinitely, and after they had recovered from the tolls the amount they paid for the bridge, they ought to have the right to continue the tolls and use them for other purposes, thereby collecting a permanent tax from the traveling public to be used for other municipal purposes. The House committee was not willing to agree with this view and, finally, after conferences, the Senate has in the main accepted our view; now when the cities or other municipalities of the States take advantage of this privilege which we are giving them to recapture privately owned toll bridges, and after they have amortized the cost to them, they must then make them free or substantially so.

That has been the principal difference in view, and it has finally been adjusted, and we have embodied the agreement in the conference reports, and I do not think conferences will hereafter be necessary on any of these bills, because we have reached an agreement as to policy.

I am hoping within the next few days to ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 or 30 minutes on the subject of bridges and I will then insert in the Record—

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And your committee will probably get out a form of bill to meet the requirements of the conference report you have agreed upon?

Mr. DENISON. If I can get the consent of the House within the next few days—

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object just to make this comment, since I brought this matter up. I think the gentleman and his fellow conferees are entitled to congratulations upon having protected the public interest as they have. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that I intend to insert in the Record with my remarks, if I can get the consent of the House to do so in the next few days, the forms of the various kinds of bridge bills that have been agreed upon by the committees of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the conference reports will be considered as having been read and agreed to.

There was no objection.

PENSIONS

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11446) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FULLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes out of order next Monday morning right after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table. I have the consent of the leader of the Republican Party and of the Democratic Party.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, did the gentleman consult the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia? Monday is District day, and I do not think we ought to give it away unless the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIEHLMAN] is present. If the chairman of the District Committee has no objection—

Mr. BERGER. I have not seen the gentleman.

Mr. BEGG. Does not the gentleman think he ought to see him?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will make it for some day other than Monday, I shall not object; but Monday is District day, and the District Committee will probably have but one other day, and it certainly ought to have next Monday.

Mr. BERGER. How about Tuesday?

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object to that.

Mr. BERGER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make the same request as to next Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, he may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire the subject of the gentleman's remarks?

Mr. BERGER. I have introduced half a dozen bills, and I have not had a chance to explain them. I want to explain my bills which I have introduced; that is all.

Mr. HOLADAY. On what particular subjects?

Mr. BERGER. Oh, on all kinds of subjects pertaining to our platform and our program.

Mr. BLANTON. Socialism mainly.

Mr. BERGER. No; not socialism mainly, but on all kinds of subjects.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 1609, an act to increase the pensions of those who lost limbs or have been totally disabled in the same, or become totally blind, in the military or naval service of the United States, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the bill S. 1609 and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state whether the Senate has passed any of our pension bills. I understand they have an embargo over there.

Mr. FULLER. As to this bill there ought to be no objection—

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman does not propose to pass a lot of Senate omnibus bills until action is taken on our bills, does he?

Mr. FULLER. No; I do not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the approval of this act all persons now on the pension roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $65 per month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost an arm at or at any point above the elbow, or a leg at or at any point above the knee, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $75 per month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost one hand or one foot and in addition thereto shall have lost a portion of the other hand or foot shall receive a pension at the rate of $85 a month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost one hand and one foot or shall have been totally disabled in the same shall receive a pension at the rate of $100 per month; and that all persons who in like manner shall have lost both arms or both legs or have been totally disabled in the same, or shall have lost the sight of both eyes, shall receive a pension at the rate of $125 per month.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FULLER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. And that we begin where we left off.

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Speaker, there were one or two bills last Saturday passed over without prejudice. I was out of town on important business, and I ask unanimous consent that we take up the fifth bill on the calendar (H. R. 965), for the relief of C. B. Wells.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take up the bill, Calendar No. 98.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I shall not object to this, but I shall to any other request.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, the first bill on the calendar is (H. R. 4140) for the relief of John Hammill. I ask unanimous consent that it be withdrawn and referred back to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

C. B. WELLS

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 965) for the relief of C. B. Wells.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. B. Wells, of Anniston, Ala., the sum of $132.80, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum.

from October 30, 1919, until the date of payment. Such sum of $132.50 represents the amount of overpayment to the United States made by the said C. B. Wells on October 30, 1919, through an error in the estimate of the weight of steel purchased by him from the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the last seven words in line 6, and all of lines 7 and 8. In line 9 strike out the first word and substitute the words "on account."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

C. P. KITCHEN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2209) for the relief of C. P. Kitchen.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BEEDY. Reserving the right to object, I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that I will not object to the bill if he will accept an amendment reducing the amount from $1,500 to $1,000. If the gentleman wants me to take the time, I will explain why I make that request.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman let me say a few words in connection with the claim?

Mr. BEEDY. Very well, there are a lot of bills to be considered here—I want to give everybody a chance.

Mr. BRIGGS. If the gentleman could see a photograph of the gash cut in this man's back, from the neck down the back, and know the period of time he was incapacitated and the testimony of the surgeon of the State medical college, I am quite sure the gentleman would not ask for that because it ought to be increased instead of diminished.

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman and I will not have any controversy about that, but this $1,500 claim is said to have been computed on the basis of average earning capacity which is put at $30 a week. Page 14 of the report shows that this man earned in July and August, $24.45; in September, $125; in October, $81.55, a total in five months of $231. How you get an average of $30 a week I do not see. It is $17 a week, if you are generous and do not consider that for some time he did not earn anything.

Mr. BRIGGS. I will say that this man is a laborer. He has 10 children, and he earns 48 cents an hour. That data was put in to give some indication of what he was making, but the testimony shows that on the average he received $25 to $30 a week year in and year out.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman ought to state to the House that the committee has cut this claim down from $5,000 to $1,500, and when you speak of earning capacity there is a bill on the calendar that seeks to pay a little child $5,000 that had no earning capacity at all.

Mr. BEEDY. That bill has been withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman I want to be generous, and we should proceed here with some degree of care. Assume that the claimant could have earned $25 a week for three or four months. Let us say he was laid up for eight months; and that would be $100 a month, or $800 for eight months. Say we add $200 more to be generous, and I will say to the gentleman that in a court of law, if this case were to be tried, I doubt very much in the first place that a court would find any legal liability, and in the second place I doubt whether $1,000 damage would be awarded. I do think that $1,500 is excessive, and I think $5,000 is all out of reason.

Mr. BRIGGS. Let me offer this testimony on page 4, third paragraph. This was written October 19, 1925. The man was injured in February, 1925. That is eight months, and this is what the surgeon says in regard to it.

It is my opinion that this man's injury was such that he is still considerably disabled as a result of it, the disability being only partial at this time, he being able to do light work and work that does not cause an excessive amount of exertion. His partial disability will probably continue getting less for the next six months. Eventually he should not be seriously handicapped from manual labor as the result of his wounds. Of course a scar to this extent will continue to cause some stiffness in his comfort for probably a year or more.

Mr. BEEDY. If the gentleman will permit me also to read from page 12:

The wound did not need any dressing after the third and fourth week in the month of May.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, the committee arrived at this amount after due consideration not based entirely upon the length of the time the man was found incapacitated from his work, but because the report showed that he was incapacitated for some time thereafter, and his earning capacity would be reduced. If the gentleman could see the photograph of the terrible wound he has in his back he would wonder how he could perform any laborious work at all. Consequently, as a matter of equity, not as a matter of law, we tried to cover this man just as he would be covered if he had been a Government employee. That is the only explanation the committee cares to offer.

Mr. BEEDY. I think I made it clear here that I wanted to be generous and do the equitable thing, and I call the attention of the House to the report, page 14, which the gentleman from Texas read from, fourth line from the last, "his partial disability will probably continue, getting less, for the next six months."

Mr. BRIGGS. I say that he was injured February 5, 1925, and in October when the testimony was given, that would be six months, which would have brought it to April of this year, so it would be 14 months—

Mr. BEEDY. I would give him full pay for six months at $100 a month, and that is more than the evidence shows he would have made, and then I would add a couple of hundred dollars as a bonus.

Mr. BRIGGS. No; this man has had an immense amount of pain and suffering. He has 10 little children who are dependent upon him for support and he has been subject to the care of the United Charities. All of these things are in connection with the injury and in addition to the fact he is not now equal to doing manual labor such as he is fitted to do, keeps him incapacitated to that extent now. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. BEEDY. I wish the gentleman would consider, if he does not now, that there is in the first place the question of legality here, and I want to waive that. I think there is a question as to the legality of, but I want to be generous with him, and I say I will not object if the gentleman will accept an amendment reducing the claim to $1,000 from $1,500.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Ought not the gentleman to come before the House and offer that amendment?

Mr. BEEDY. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman divide that difference and make it $1,250?

Mr. BEEDY. I will not take up the time of the House to dicker on that, but I will make it $1,200.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to C. T. Kitchen, of Galveston, Tex., in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for serious injuries inflicted upon him by a Government airplane operated by an officer or aviator of the United States Army on or about February 25, 1925, in Galveston County, Tex., while such officer or aviator was engaged in the operation of such airplane in line of duty.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Line 5, page 1, strike out $5,000 and insert $1,500.

Mr. BEEDY. I move to amend by striking out $1,500 and inserting $1,200.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out $1,500 and insert $1,200.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPLY OF HON. CHARLES H. BURKE, COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, TO CONGRESSMAN JAMES A. FREAR

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement made by Hon. Charles H. Burke, Commis-sloner of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, before the Committee on Indian Affairs a few days ago, relative to Indian matters, and also a very brief statement made by Congressman HAYDEN be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my extension of remarks. I may state that I talked with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], to whom in part Mr. Burke replied, and it is satisfactory to him to have Mr. Burke's statement inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I gathered from the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] that Mr. Burke's testimony given before the Committee on Indian Affairs covered three hours, and it has already been printed. Why again print it in the RECORD?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. There are at least four speeches by Mr. FREAR in regard to this matter, and I think it is only fair to Mr. Burke, the Commissioner of the Indian Bureau, that his statement should go into the RECORD.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It seems to me it is an unnecessary expense and a loading up of the RECORD. It is already in print, a speech of three hours. I do not think it is reasonable, although I do not know enough about it to enter an objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this three-hour speech was delivered before the gentleman's committee?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And it is printed as a committee hearing, and Mr. Burke could have a hundred thousand copies reprinted by paying the actual cost if he wants under the rules of the House. What is the use of putting it in the RECORD?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. We would like to have it given the same publicity and the same circulation as is given to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman heard Mr. FREAR this morning and he ought to be fair with Mr. FREAR. He asked that the statement of Mr. Collier should go in, and his request was denied.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I did not object. Mr. Collier, however, is not a representative of the Government. A number of Mr. Collier's letters have already been inserted in the RECORD by Mr. FREAR. Mr. Burke commented on these and other matters sent out by Mr. Collier.

Mr. BLANTON. His action was attacked by Mr. Burke, as I understand.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. Mr. Collier attacked Mr. Burke, and Mr. Burke defended himself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a number of speeches have been made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] in this House attacking the Bureau of Indian Affairs, in the course of which he challenged the commissioner, Hon. Charles H. Burke, at its head to refute the charges made by him.

As a result of this challenge the commissioner advised the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives that, if as many as three members of such committee desired him to do so, he would be glad to appear before that committee and make a detailed reply to the charges preferred. The committee voted to hear Mr. Burke during the consideration of H. R. 8823.

While the length of Mr. FREAR's speeches as extended in the RECORD made it impossible for the commissioner to cover every matter referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin, his statement is sufficiently comprehensive to cover most of the charges made. I may state that it is the consensus of opinion of the Committee on Indian Affairs that Mr. Burke's statement should be inserted in the RECORD, so that the same people who may have read Mr. FREAR's speeches will have an opportunity to read the commissioner's reply.

Under leave granted by the House I am, therefore, appending hereto a letter dated April 1, 1926, and the statement made by Commissioner Burke before the Indian Affairs Committee on April 10 and 14, 1926:

STATEMENT OF HON. CHARLES H. BURKE, COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, possibly some members of the committee have not read the letter of April 1, which the chairman has suggested be incorporated in this record, and I want to read it for their information.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 1, 1926.

Hon. SCOTT LEAVITT,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LEAVITT: In the remarks of my friend, the Hon. Mr. FREAR, of Wisconsin, appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 26, 1926, referring to remarks made on a former occasion and appearing in the RECORD of March 5, 1926, Mr. FREAR stated:

"I would not willingly do Mr. Burke any injustice, but he should come out in the open if any of these statements are incorrect and plead his case before the public; or, better, before a committee of the House or Senate, where the record will be made."

As I do not consider what Mr. FREAR has stated constitutes an indictment, I do not feel called upon to "plead" my case before the public or elsewhere. I am, however, ready and willing to appear before your committee at any time to answer his charges and to answer any questions that any member of the committee may wish to ask me. In view of the misinformation, misleading and untrue statements made by Mr. FREAR, if there are as many as three members of your committee who feel that they would like me to answer them, it is my desire and hope that the committee will fix a time and afford me an opportunity to do so, the time to be agreeable to Mr. FREAR in order that he may be present.

Respectfully,

CHARLES H. BURKE, Commissioner.

Mr. BURKE. By way of explanation I will say that the reason I predicated my request by stating if there were as many as three members that would like me to make a statement, that I would be very glad to do so, was because I did not believe that any member of this committee who had served even one term in Congress would be misled by the statements contained in the speeches of Mr. FREAR, knowing that there are members of the committee who are serving in this Congress who have not served heretofore, and thinking, possibly, they might have read the speeches and felt that there were statements that they would like to hear me respond to; that the committee treated my request by extending to me the courtesy of coming before the committee and making a statement, I wish to express my appreciation and thanks. In what I am going to say I shall endeavor to avoid indulging in any personal reflections. I have no quarrel with my friend and former colleague over this or any other matter, but I do feel that members of this committee and Members of the Congress, and the public, perhaps, ought to have a statement from the commissioner with reference to the things that have appeared from time to time in a series of his speeches or extended remarks appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I want at the outset to exonerate Mr. FREAR from having possibly made some misleading statements and statements that are inaccurate and, perhaps, not true, because it is very apparent that he has made no study of the subject; that he is speaking without any knowledge acquired by research, but he has taken his information from an organization in which he apparently seems to have entire confidence, and then, such statements as he may have picked up from mixed bloods or other Indians and accepted as true, without any regard to what the official reports of Congress may disclose or what the files of the Department of the Interior and Bureau of Indian Affairs may contain relative to statistics and other information, but he accepts statements that come to him recklessly without questioning the authority or the reliability of the source from which the information comes.

In his remarks on March 5 he repeatedly states that he bases much of what he says upon information from the association known as the American Indian Defense Association. This is an organization that has moved in here recently, represented by a man by the name of John Collier. He has opened an office and he has been very active in furnishing to Congress and to the press propaganda, issuing from time to time pamphlets and circulars most of which I have here, and is maintaining a press bureau, and, apparently, his relations with the gentleman from Wisconsin are rather close, apparently quite intimate, and Mr. FREAR has accepted the statements that Mr. Collier has made, as being reliable.

In this speech of March 5, I just want to quote a few extracts, page 3327 of the RECORD, as follows:

"I have had placed before me statements prepared by the American Indian Defense Association."

Also a letter of February 2, 1926, from John Collier, executive secretary Indian Defense Association, and in the RECORD of March 5—

"Haven Emerson, president of the American Indian Defense Association, placed in print on the desks of Members a specific statement."

And on page 5036 of the RECORD of the same date—

"John Collier, executive secretary of the same organization, says,"

And on page 5044, referring to a statement affecting H. R. 9133—

"It comes from the American Indian Defense Association."

And on page 5037—

"I am informed by responsible members of the Indian Defense Association."

And in the RECORD of March 26, page 6117, letter to Mr. FREAR, dated March 24, 1926, signed by John Collier, executive secretary American Indian Defense Association.

On page 3328 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

"The Indian Defense Association, that is interested solely on behalf of the Indians of the country but not financially nor politically as may be the case with other interests, has submitted to me, through its secretary, a statement."

His statements, I may say to the committee, in his speech clearly indicate that he got the information either from John Collier or from the propaganda that he has been circulating. I have no quarrel with John Collier or the Indian Defense Association. Apparently it is an organization that is operating as much for the advantage of Mr. Collier himself as for any other purpose. It is with me like any other lobbying organization or representative, and I do not think that from such a source any Member of Congress ought to accept propaganda that it circulates, at least without inquiry or without ascertainment whether or not that information is reliable.

I mention Mr. Collier maintaining a press bureau, and I would not mention this, but my friend in his remarks the other day made some comment because the letter that I wrote the chairman on April 1 appeared in a newspaper out in his district in Wisconsin. If that letter got into any newspaper, Mr. Chairman, it did not come from me. If it got out to the press it was taken from this committee and given to the press. I had nothing whatsoever to do with it. I am not maintaining any press bureau, and I do not need any. The speech of my friend from Wisconsin on March 5 was put out in advance with a press release, which I saw and you may have seen. Some of the publicity that went out contained a fine cut of the gentleman, and I am sure that made a good impression on the public, because he has a fine face, and it is headed: "Indian Bureau charged with gross thefts. FREAR urges inquiry into 'notorious scandals' in handling tribal affairs," and then an article following along the line of the headlines.

Mr. FREAR. I understand you prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. BURKE. Yes. The first matter that I will mention is a statement made by Mr. FREAR in his speech of February 5, and it has to do with some bridges that were built across the Rio Grande at Cochiti and San Juan pueblos in New Mexico. I will read from the RECORD of February 5, 1926, page 3329, as follows:

"A recent example: Congress in 1923 appropriated $82,000 for the whole cost of two bridges across the Rio Grande in New Mexico. The entire sum was made a reimbursable charge against the Pueblos of Cochiti and San Juan.

"In the instance of Cochiti it could be said that the Indians would use the bridge about one-fourth as much as the whites on the west bank of the river. In the case of San Juan it could be said that the Indians would use the bridge perhaps one-tenth as much as the whites on the west bank. But the whole charge was piled on these Pueblo Tribes, which incidentally are extremely poor.

"Like nearly all schemes of this kind, the above Cochiti and San Juan bridge schemes, including the reimbursable features, came from the Indian Office."

Now, on March 5, at page 5037, he practically reiterates the same statement.

Now, let us have the facts. I was in New Mexico some time before this legislation was enacted. I had a hearing or conference with some of the Indians from these two pueblos. They represented to me the conditions that obtained there with reference to their inability to get across the river in high water; that their pueblo was on one side of the river, their lands were upon the other, and that they would have to go 12 miles at times to cross the river, and they were very solicitous that the Government provide bridges for them. The Indian Welfare Association, I think it is, of New Mexico urged me to become interested in the proposition. The superintendent of the northern Pueblos took it up with me, and he said that there was a very urgent demand, and that it was a hardship upon these Indians to be situated as they were. He said further if the Government would provide these bridges it would in a measure restore the confidence of those two pueblos in the Government which had been somewhat discredited by the activities of Mr. John Collier a short time before that. Then Mr. Vaux, president of the board of Indian commissioners, appealed to me, setting forth the necessity and the justice, etc., in this proposition. That was the information that I had as to the necessity for these two bridges being built.

Mr. MORROW. Your Indian Office did not recommend reimbursables at all.

Mr. BURKE. I will come to that. Let us see what we did. Remember that Mr. FREAR evidently has a great deal of information that we did not have, for he says that where one Indian used those bridges there would be four white persons, or something to that effect. I did not get that information. In our estimates we incorporated an item which was sent to the Bureau of the Budget and transmitted with the estimates as a gratuity, and I want to read it, the original item for bridges at Cochiti and San Juan pueblos, as carried in the estimate sent to Congress in December, 1923, as follows:

"Gratuity: For the construction of steel bridges across the Rio Grande within the Cochiti and San Juan pueblo Indian grants, New Mexico, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $82,200."

In the hearings before the subcommittee, Assistant Commissioner Meritt stated (House hearings on Interior appropriation bill for 1925, p. 384, December 22, 1923), in support of this item as follows:

"Mr. MERITT. The pueblo of Cochiti, N. Mex., is located on both sides of the Rio Grande, being practically cut in two by the river. Many years ago a small wooden bridge was built by a mining or lumber company across the river about a mile above the pueblo; but this bridge was destroyed by high water, and the Indians must now ford the river in order to get across, which they can not do during high water, and must travel south about 12 miles to the bridge at San Felipe and then back up the other side. This is very inconvenient, as the homes of the Indians are on one side of the river and their cultivated land on the other side. * * *

"These Indians have no funds to their credit, and these bridges are very necessary for the benefit of those Indians. They live on one side of the river and the lands are on the other, and it is almost impossible for them to get along without this bridge. It has been urged very strongly by the superintendents of the Pueblo Reservation, and the white people who are interested in the Indians are urging it very strongly.

"Mr. CRAMTON. You say they have to go about 12 miles south to the bridge at San Juan Pueblo?

"Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir. Nothing we could do would be of greater benefit to the Indians than the construction of this bridge.

Then Mr. CARTER, a very distinguished Member of the House of Representatives, with a service of 20 years, at one time the honored chairman of this great committee, and of Indian blood, and so no one is going to question his good faith as a friend of the Indians, said:

"Mr. Meritt, you realize that that is a character of appropriation that has never been made by Congress.

"Mr. MERITT. We realize it is a little bit out of the ordinary, but the need is so great we feel justified in asking for the appropriation."

The House Appropriations Committee did not include the item in the appropriation bill when it was reported, and it was not in the bill when it passed the House. I went before the Senate committee when they were holding their hearings on the appropriation bill, and I will read to you what was stated there, on February 5, 1924, referring to the estimate for the Cochiti and San Juan Bridges, page 106, Senate hearings on Interior appropriation bill for 1925; in answer to a question:

"Commissioner BURKE. Yes, sir; 'within the Cochiti and San Juan Pueblo Indian grants, New Mexico, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $82,200.' It was estimated for, and those Indians are very poor, and they have been clamoring for these bridges. They have land on both sides of the river, and at one time there was a temporary wooden bridge there which has since been destroyed and is gone; and now, during much of the year, they have to travel 12 miles to get across the river. That is at Cochiti, and the San Juan conditions are very similar. There are the Pueblo Indians that you have heard so much about."

We had been hearing a great deal about them at that time.

"Senator SMOOT. Why should not that amount be reimbursable?"

"Commissioner BURKE. Because there is not anything to reimburse it from.

"Senator SMOOT. That is a pretty good reason.

"Commissioner BURKE. It would not mean anything if you put it in. It is a gratuity. Everything that has been done for the Pueblos has been a gratuity.

"Senator SMOOT. Why can they not get along without it?"

"Commissioner BURKE. It is one of the things that have been urged very assiduously by the friends of the Pueblos and by the Pueblos themselves."

Some time later, the bill was reported in executive session, and in the bill was the item for the construction of these bridges with the word in parenthesis in the last line (reimbursable), and it went through in conference and became law.

There are the facts, Mr. Chairman, as to the statements made about the Cochiti and San Juan Bridges, and I commend to my friend what he said in one of his speeches:

"It is possible that inaccuracies have occurred where many charges were made, but if any statement is incorrect I will be willing publicly to correct the same."

Now, Mr. Chairman, the next item I want to discuss is the Lees Ferry Bridge across the Colorado River, and I am not going to read everything that Mr. FREAR stated, because it would weary the committee, but I have excerpts from his speech that are copied literally. On February 5, page 3327 of the RECORD, he says:

"I have had placed before me statements prepared by the American Indian Defense Association which riddle every attempt to justify this bridge by the Work statement submitted."

That refers to Secretary of the Interior Work, head of the department charged with responsibility for making report in such matters. But the Indian Defense Association have more information, apparently, and what they say is accepted by the gentleman without question. Then he goes on to say it is not for the good of the Indians:

"The bridge is not for the Indians, never was for them, and is a palpable fraud in its attempt to seize their funds under that guise. But there is far more than the $100,000 involved, and the question should come squarely before Congress to determine what influence persuaded the Bureau of Indian Affairs to consent to this contribution and who is the party responsible for that consent and what relation, if any, does he have to those in Arizona who have been insistent upon this contribution from the Navajo Tribe. This is a subject that can not be overlooked when fixing official responsibility for misleading Congress."

"Ordinarily the Indian Office seeks to protect Indian tribes, and Government officials constantly declare this to be their prime purpose in managing the affairs of the Indians. No official can defend this proposition."

Then on March 3, page 5033, he reiterates the whole thing and says that it did pass in the last Congress and it was "slipped through in some way. I submit it could not very well be slipped through at this time."

I presume that is because the Indian Defense Association is on the ground and the gentleman from Wisconsin is now a member of this committee; I do not know. Then he goes on and makes these charges, page 5035 of the RECORD. Of course, the Indian Bureau is responsible for this from his standpoint, and he continues:

"I charge, first, that the Indian Bureau, under the direction of Commissioner Burke and Assistant Commissioner Meritt, has approved and supported bills that have looted the treasury of the Navajo Indians."

They did not have any treasury at all just a short time ago, so we could not loot it; that is a sure thing. Then he puts in items that he charges us with being responsible for, and me particularly, aggregating over $771,000. About the only answer I can make to that statement is this, Mr. Chairman, that over $500,000 of that amount was appropriated before I was Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and it was all appropriated while the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin was a Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FREAR. You do not want an interruption there?

Mr. BURKE. No, sir; I do not. Possibly I ought to be censured for two-thirds of this amount that was appropriated when I was not here, and then because some more was appropriated since I was commissioner, I suppose I have to be held responsible. Gentlemen of the committee, for more than 15 years it has been the policy of Congress to make appropriations for certain purposes in an Indian reservation reimbursable, and as Mr. CARTER said, that to do what was being urged, to appropriate money as a gratuity for building bridges, would be something that had never been done. The Bureau of Indian Affairs has never been urging reimbursable appropriations. That comes from Congress, and ~~is~~ is a policy, I say, that has been so recognized that it has not been departed from except in the case of Cochiti and San Juan, since its adoption.

Now, let me give just a little history with reference to Lees Ferry Bridge. I find that the matter was initiated February 19, 1921. I was not Commissioner of Indian Affairs; I was not in Washington; I did not know anything about it, and so I certainly can not be responsible for what happened at the time it was initiated.

On January 15, 1924, or rather after the act authorizing the investigation, and report was made, and it was made by the engineer of the War Department, report was made that this bridge was desirable, that it would be a benefit to the Indians as well as other people, and the Secretary made a report recommending that one-half of the cost be reimbursable. This policy of reimbursables was adopted because in the Osages a rich oil field was discovered to show the production, will say that since 1915, some $177,000,000 have been received from oil royalties from oil and gas leases. Does anybody here think that if at some time before 1915 some improvements had been made that was a benefit to the property of these Indians, and for their use and convenience, that it would have been a hardship after they got $177,000,000 from oil royalties, to pay back to the Government what improvements may have cost.

The Navajos, when these appropriations were made reimbursable for different purposes, I presume it was hardly contemplated that they ever would have any great sum of money, and in that event if an effort was made to recoup and reimburse the Government for any moneys that had been expended and it was going to do an injustice to the Indians, the reimbursable law could be taken up and repealed and let them go free. That is probably what would have happened. It now transpires that there is a wonderful prospect of a great development of oil and gas in that great area, and remember that the original reservation created by treaty only contained 3,000,000 acres of land, and that by proclamation and Executive withdrawals, the area now that is occupied by these Indians constitutes thirteen million and some thousands of acres of land. That is the present area of the Navajo Reservation.

I do not see myself where there can be any serious objection to making appropriations that may seem to be desirable and in the interest of those Indians and relieve the States of Arizona and New Mexico from some of the great expense involved in view of this great area that is not subject to taxation, but I am not advocating the reimbursable proposition, I am simply presenting it to you as it appears.

The bill that authorizes this to be done—the building of the Lees Ferry Bridge—authorized the appropriation, was passed in 1925, and it was discussed in the House of Representatives. The gentleman from Wisconsin was a Member of the House. It seems to have been well understood what it was. Mr. CARTER, when the matter was first under discussion on the floor of the House said (p. 3512, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Feb. 19, 1921):

"The amount taken from the Treasury ought to be reimbursable."

Nobody questions Mr. CARTER being a friend of the Indian. On January 21, 1925, when this matter was up (p. 2232, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD), Mr. Snyder said, answering, I think, a question of Mr. BLANTON, of Texas:

"I would like to answer the gentleman in this way: This is a bridge which is thoroughly needed by both Indians and white men."

"Mr. BLANTON. By both Indians and white men?"

"Mr. SNYDER. Yes."

"Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask some questions. The gentleman says this bridge is needed for both the white men and the Indians and there are only 800 Indians involved. We are proposing to take the money out of the Treasury. Let it be Indian money or public money, it does not make any difference, because all the Indian money was at one time public money which came out of the general funds of the Treasury."

"Mr. SNYDER. Of course, the gentleman overlooked one part in this respect and that is this money is reimbursable."

"Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; I know that may be so."

"Mr. SNYDER. The Indians undoubtedly within a short number of years on account of the discovery of oil and minerals will have sufficient money with which to reimburse the Government."

Then Mr. Snyder said:

"But the gentleman overlooked the fact that the State pays one half the value of the bridge and the Indians eventually will pay the other half."

The bill came up on Calendar Wednesday when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called. The bill was referred on January 22, 1925, to the Commerce Committee of the Senate, and on January 23, 1925, this reference was changed to the Indian Affairs Committee of the Senate. On February 14, 1925, the bill was reported to the Senate and on February 18, 1925, page 4061 of the permanent CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, this bill was called up by Senator CAMERON and passed without debate. The bill was approved by the President on February 26, 1925, and became Public Act No. 482 of the Sixty-eighth Congress.

The matter had consideration by the Congress, and then we had nothing else to do when this Congress convened except in the estimates to report all items that had been authorized by Congress, and so in the annual estimates this matter was submitted, and, as I understand, included in the appropriation bill and is now law.

There has been some discussion as to the attitude of the Indians toward this appropriation. The superintendent of the jurisdiction where Mr. Chee Dodge lives writes, under date of March 3, 1926:

"Within recent dates there have appeared unfavorable comments on the item for the bridge at Lees Ferry in the general deficiency bill. In this connection I have to advise that none of the Navajos of this jurisdiction have commented unfavorably to me on this proposed item. Some time ago Mr. Chee Dodge, chairman of the Navajo Council, was here and asked me about the bridge; he expressed himself as thinking it was all right. Mr. Dodge stated that while it would not be of direct benefit to the Navajos living in this part of the country, it no doubt would be of benefit to those living in the western part of the Navajo district. He particularly stated that it would give those Navajos a chance to go out into the upper country; possibly open up additional grazing lands; that they could go out there and get rams for their herds; and could obtain work up there. That the Navajos of the western part of the reservations were receiving no benefit from the Gallup-Shiprock highway, yet they would have to pay their share of the cost of building the road just the same."

"I asked Mr. Dodge if it would be all right with him if I communicated his views to you, and he said 'Yes.'"

I do not think I will take up any more of your time in discussing that item.

The next subject that I want to discuss is a statement made by Mr. FREAR in a number of his speeches, and it is very apparent that he bases it upon propaganda that has been circulated by Mr. Collier. It has reference to the bill to extend the oil leasing law to Executive-order Indian reservations. He did not know, I am sure, that for four years, nearly, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the bureau have been doing everything that it was humanly possible to do to bring about legislation so that the Executive-order Indian reservations could be leased under the same law that applies to so-called treaty reservations, and always with the view of getting all of the proceeds from royalties, as is customary in treaty reservations, paid into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the tribe occupying the reservation, to be available for what? For the administration, civilization, education, etc., of the Indians. He did not know that under the law which applies to so-called treaty reservations that there is not a word with reference to the proceeds. That it has been a matter dealt with entirely by the Congress, just as has been the case when timber is authorized to be sold on a treaty reservation or on an Executive-order reservation, or there are any other moneys coming from the reservations, Congress, in its wisdom, has said how they should be disposed of, and so, if you had nothing but the law that applies to so-called treaty reservations, so far as the proceeds are concerned, it would require Congress to say what disposition should be made of them. I do not believe—and I say this in all kindness—I do not think the gentleman knows what a treaty reservation is.

Mr. FEAR. I have understood this fully, what the gentleman states; I am put into an erroneous position and I do not think the gentleman willingly does it.

Mr. BURKE. What is a treaty reservation? We have certain reservations, the Osages and the Five Tribes, and there may be a few others, where the Government in a treaty has ceded to the Indians the title to their land subject to its not being alienated or disposed of except with the consent of Congress, and they have title to it absolutely, and in these cases it has always been the policy to put into the Treasury the moneys that are received from any purpose to be paid out to the Indians, and in some instances used for their administration and support where they have consented to it. That is one kind of a treaty reservation. Another treaty reservation is just such a reservation as the so-called Navajo reservation, and all under heaven there is in the treaty is that the Government permits the Indians to have the use and occupancy of that area, and does not say anything about the title. It is entirely within the power of Congress to make any disposition it may see fit of such a reservation, except the courts will not permit them to do it without some consideration. That is one kind of treaty reservation, and I think many people do not understand the difference between a treaty reservation where the Indian owns the land and where they only have a right to use and occupy it.

Let us see. On March 5 Mr. FEAR said:

"There is pending to-day before our Indian Committee—and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has appeared before us in its support—a bill that, as I said the other day in answer to a question in the House by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], proposes to allow 95 per cent of all the oil that is produced on upward of 1,000,000 acres of Indian lands to go scot-free of taxation, so far as oil producers are concerned. The Indian who gets 5 per cent royalty will pay out of that 5 per cent royalty under this bill approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs 37½ per cent, or more than one-third of the Indian's share, which will go to pay taxes not only for the Indian but for the producer, who gets 95 per cent of the total oil output. The Indian is to pay all oil taxes on 22,000,000 acres of Indian reservations by the Indian Bureau's bill. There is no dispute, I believe, as to that.

"Think of that proposition."

Then, on page 5038 of the RECORD, he says:

"The Executive-order reservation bill granting a huge Christmas present to a waiting army of oil speculators is not the only oil present given by Commissioner Burke and his aids from Indian funds to oil exploiters, if I correctly understand the law."

And, further on page 5042:

"Some oil exploiter depending upon the order of Secretary Fall throwing open to oil exploitation Executive-order Indian lands has brought suit to have his oil rights given preference over the Indian rights as to such Indian lands.

"This suit, after a hazardous career on appeal, is now on the Supreme Court docket, not to be reached for two years.

"In the meantime, Commissioner Burke appeared before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House and urged the passage of his oil leasing bill leasing 37½ per cent taken from the Indians for oil producers' taxes, so that the oil suit appealed to the Supreme Court 'may be dismissed,' which he assured the committee would then occur."

If I have an excerpt, it might be proper for me to insert it here, because I want to relieve my friend from Arizona from any anxiety in case he is laboring under any. I have a statement here of the gentleman from Wisconsin in which he exonerates the gentleman from Arizona for introducing his bill and puts the responsibility on the Bureau of Indian Affairs. I know that he would be glad to have that brought to his attention so that it may not involve him in any way that might be embarrassing. This is from page 5044, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 5:

"It is taken for granted that the measures here discussed, like so many other Indian bills, are the product of the Indian Bureau, which has indorsed H. R. 9133, and that the congressional sponsors are not prime movers or intentionally parties to the sought-for confiscation."

Mr. Chairman, I said that for four years I have been doing everything that I could do to get legislation that would permit Executive-order lands to be developed, and I think they ought to be, and after the decision of Secretary Fall, which was an opinion prepared in the law division of the Interior Department wherein it was held that the general leasing law of 1920 applied to Executive-order Indian reservations, I do not need to say that we were very much disappointed with that holding and did everything we could in protest of it, and a few months after Secretary Fall retired, the present Secretary came in, and one of the first things that I did after he came in was to bring to his attention the decision in the so-called Harrison case, telling him what I thought about it, and requested that it be submitted to the new solicitor of the department with a view, possibly, to getting a rescission of the decision of Secretary Fall. Secretary Work came into office on March 4, and on March 31, in my feeble way, with the assistance of others in the bureau, I submitted to him a brief in the form of a letter, copy of which I have here, wherein I discussed this whole proposition, and I find that on April 18 he referred it to the solicitor, as suggested. I will ask, for the information of the committee, so that it may be available, that at the conclusion of my remarks, this may be appended, so that any person who wishes to know what my position was and what the position of the Indian Bureau was at that time on the question can ascertain by reading that letter.

Mr. HASTINGS. What year?

Mr. BURKE. 1923. Secretary Work came in on March 4, 1923. The matter drifted along, and I want to say here, because I do not think I would be doing justice to a very worthy organization if I did not mention it, that during this entire controversy I had the very hearty support and cooperation of the Indian Rights Association, of Philadelphia, of which Mr. Brosius is the local representative. He was in every way possible aiding us in trying to find some way by which we could avoid having Executive-order Indian reservations leased under the general leasing law that did not give to Indians any part whatsoever of royalties. So it drifted along and finally, in the following winter—and the Indian Rights Association are entitled to a great deal of credit for what was accomplished—the Secretary of the Interior and the President simultaneously, it transpired, asked the Department of Justice for a decision with respect to whether or not the general leasing law applied to Executive-order Indian reservations, and everything then was suspended and there were no more permits issued—there had not been for many months—and in May, 1924, the Department of Justice held that the general leasing law did not apply to Executive-order Indian reservations, but did not say anything about title of the land, but that if the law had intended to include Executive-order Indian reservations it would have said so.

In the last Congress we were trying to get legislation to get all the proceeds for the Indians, and I did not consent during the last Congress, although the gentleman from Wisconsin says I did, to any 37½ per cent. The matter was suggested, but I said that under no circumstances would we consent to any such proposition, unless the 37½ was going to be used for the benefit of the Indians. The bill passed both Houses, got into conference, and without giving away any secrets, because I do not suppose that my friend who is so earnest in trying to get this legislation, cares anything about it now, the Indian Rights Association, with the knowledge of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, had something to do with a point of order that was made that defeated the bill in the last Congress, and it failed to become a law, a point of order made by Mr. Dallinger, then a member of the committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. You also told me that the President would certainly veto the bill, were it to pass, if he followed your advice.

Mr. BURKE. I do not want to be quoted as to saying anything of what the President would do. What happened? The gentleman from Wisconsin as usual, uninformed, not intentionally, relying upon his friends who furnish him information, makes the statement that after this decision was rendered this oil exploiter, I think he calls him, brought suit and went into the courts. That is not true. I will tell you what happened. The Department of Justice brought suit against this man Harrison, who was operating on an Executive-order reservation under permit, to eject him and went into the United States District Court of the State of Utah and made Mr. Harrison party defendant. The case was tried in that court, and that court decided that the general leasing law did apply to Executive-order Indian reservations. In other words, he sustained the opinion of Secretary Fall, and immediately the Government appealed the case, and it went to the circuit court of appeals for that district, appeal by the Government. When the case was presented and considered by that court, the justices, believing it apparently to be a very close question, side stepped and certified it to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it is now pending.

Now, if the decision of the United States District Court of Utah be sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States, as it has already been dignified by the decision of the district court and passed up by the circuit court of appeals, this is the situation we would have: The general leasing law would apply to Executive-order reservations, and no part of the proceeds from oil and gas leases would go to the Indians directly or otherwise. Yes; but the gentleman says, Congress could take care of that. True; but what about those vested rights that would have to be recognized of some several hundred applicants who have made applications for permits, and then, again, the effect of that decision would be that 37½ per cent of the proceeds under the general leasing law would belong to States, and without any condition whatsoever.

How many of you Members of Congress from Western States, should the Supreme Court sustain that decision of the district court, would consent to the 37 per cent being taken away from your States, after the Supreme Court had held that it belonged to the State? What chance would there be, gentlemen, of getting legislation as to the 37½ per cent when that condition might obtain, and so we were confronted with quite a different situation, and having had some little experience in legislation, and having lived some time, I was rather of the opinion that we had better see if we could not reach some adjustment of this matter that would be a solution of it that would do full justice to Indians and be susceptible of enactment by Congress.

So after many, many conferences with different people who were interested, some Senators, some Members of the House, oil men—we even receive an oil man in our bureau cordially and treat him courteously—there was a sort of tentative understanding that as an initiative of the matter, we tentatively agreed on two bills, one introduced by one of the Senators from New Mexico and the other introduced by the gentleman from Arizona, Mr. HAYDEN. There had not been any opposition from any source, as far as we knew, to this program, when there appeared on the scene John Collier, representing the Indian Defense Society. We did not know he was interested; we did not know he was concerned about it, but he appeared here at the hearing on the bill; and let us see what he did. The matter was discussed, and I will say before I mention this that section 3 of the bill which had been tentatively agreed upon recognized the permittees who had actually gotten a permit, while Secretary Fall's order was in effect, and it only meant 20, all told.

A representative of an oil company came in and talked with me and Secretary Edwards together and wanted to add an amendment and wanted us to recommend it, that would recognize, in addition to the permittees, such applicants as had spent money for certain purposes. We took the position that we would not go any further; as far as we were concerned, it would have to be determined by Congress, and that we doubted very much the wisdom of adding anything other than 20 permits, because it would open up the question of all these 400 applications, many of whom might be speculators, and mostly persons who had expended no money and really had no equity. When the bill was considered here, a gentleman by the name of Jones, and another by the name of Wallace, suggested to the committee adding an amendment that would recognize such applicants as had expended money for the purposes stated, and Mr. Collier, after we got to that point, was interrogated, and he said:

"In this instance it would be the desire of everybody to give whatever relief to those who really spend out money, and therefore I would strongly indorse the suggestion of the last speaker."

That was to add to the 20 permittees a few applicants.

Mr. FREAR. How many?

Mr. BURKE. It does not matter how many. Continuing, Mr. Collier said:

"Coming back now to section 1 which brings the control over the leasing of Executive-order lands practically under the general regulations that has to do with treaty reservations, that is the same. It is evidently. I have no suggestion to make about that." (House hearings, p. 41.)

And on page 51:

"Mr. FREAR. What is your attitude in regard to this bill?

"Mr. COLLIER. The bill is good.

"Mr. FREAR. As to section 3?

"Mr. COLLIER. As to section 3, all my suggestions have been accepted.

"Mr. FREAR. You agree with the gentleman who spoke?

"Mr. COLLIER. Section 3 with the suggested amendments is absolutely good and in regard to section 2, you do not need it."

That is the one that proposes to dispose of royalties, 37½ per cent to go to the State to be used, not by the State as it might see fit, but for construction of roads in the reservations from which the royalties might come, or roads leading to the reservation, or the education of Indian children. That is quite a different proposition than giving the State 37½ per cent. And Mr. Collier continued:

"Section 1, if the tax clause of the 1924 act were inserted, would completely cover the tax production.

"Mr. FREAR. Striking out section 2?

"Mr. COLLIER. You do not need section 2 if the law of 1924 is enacted for the Executive reservations."

The act of 1924: He says the first section of this bill makes applicable to Executive-order Indian reservations the law that obtains to treaty reservations. The act of 1924, which is incorporated in the record, says "That unallotted land on Indian reservations"—that applied to Executive-order reservations; this law of 1924 applied to them as well as it does to treaty reservations, which would make it possible for the State or States where the lands were located to levy a production tax. I will insert this statute of 1924 with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it may be included.

The statute referred to (43 Stat. 244) is as follows:

[Public—No. 158—68th Congress]

"An act (H. R. 6298) to authorize the leasing for oil and gas mining purposes of unallotted lands on Indian reservations affected by the proviso to section 3 of the act of February 28, 1891

"Be it enacted, etc., That unallotted land on Indian reservations other than lands of the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Reservation subject to lease for mining purposes for a period of 10 years under the proviso to section 3 of the act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. L. p. 795), may be leased at public auction by the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the council speaking for such Indians, for oil and gas mining purposes for a period of not to exceed 10 years, and as much longer thereafter as oil or gas shall be found in paying quantities, and the terms of any existing oil and gas mining lease may in like manner be amended by extending the term thereof for as long as oil or gas shall be found in paying quantities: Provided, That the production of oil and gas and other minerals on such lands may be taxed by the State in which said lands are located in all respects the same as production on unrestricted lands, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid the tax so assessed against the royalty interests on said lands: Provided, however, That such tax shall not become a lien or charge of any kind or character against the land or the property of the Indian owner.

"Approved May 29, 1924."

Mr. BURKE. Mr. FREAR would have you believe we were taking something from the Indians. We were trying to give the Indians something they did not have instead of taking from them. And so we were going to have 62½ per cent royalties paid into the Treasury for their benefit, and we were going to use the 37½ per cent indirectly for their benefit. I want to say to you that under the general leasing law, the law of 1920, if it was to operate on an Executive-order Indian reservation, and the Indians got all of the proceeds, they would not receive as much as they will get from 62½ per cent under the law that applies to treaty reservations. Why? Because under the general leasing law, 25 per cent of the area in an application, which may be as much as 640 acres, the applicant may have a lease, 5 per cent royalty, and no bonus, and you take it in the Osage country. If the general leasing law had properly applied the Osage Indians would not have received one-half as much as they have received under the law that makes it possible to sell the leases to the highest bidder, and that is exactly what the law applying to treaty reservations does. No leases are made at a royalty of less than 12½ per cent, and then a bonus is paid for the lease, and we have had 160 acres of land in the Osage country where the bonus paid was $1,900,000, and the royalty was one-eighth unless the wells produced more than 100 barrels, and then it was one-sixth, and under the general leasing law of 1920 the royalty for the lease of that land might have been only 5 per cent. So I think you can see, gentlemen, that under this proposition the Indians are very fortunate if we can get the legislation enacted as proposed.

I will go a little further. The gentleman has reiterated and repeated, and so has his friend Collier, this statement, that because there was language in that bill that the 37½ per cent was to be in lieu of taxes that we were proposing to exempt from taxation all production, and, therefore, we were favoring the oil operators. He says that he wants to be fair.

On the 10th day of March, 1920, a letter was written to the chairman of this committee and the chairman of the Senate committee, by the Secretary of the Interior, and the gentleman from Wisconsin was so advised by letter, that an amendment was suggested to clear the matter so that there could not be any possibility of any uncertainty about it. That amendment or one akin to it has been, I understand, incorporated in the bill pending before the Senate committee on Indian Affairs. It is preposterous to suggest for a moment that we were concerned about exempting oil operators from being taxed under the law of 1924, which would have become effective the moment section 1 of your bill became a law.

Let us go a little further. When the gentleman made his speech on March 5, and before he made the speech, I presume, because the custom used to be when a Member had a bill that he wanted to introduce, when he came over to the House he went up to the basket and deposited it in the basket, and so I assume that the bill that I refer to, introduced on the 5th of March, was introduced before he made the speech, and there was a duplicate of that bill introduced by a Senator on March 3, two days before he made his speech, and both bills, in my opinion, were drafted by John Collier.

Let us see about these bills. Mr. FREAR, in his speech on March 5, made the statement that the Bureau of Indian Affairs was supporting the bill introduced by my friend from Arizona, which he said would validate 425 applications, and further on, when he extended his remarks, he put into the record one of John Collier's statements which I have here, where Mr. Collier made that statement. That was on March 5. That is the record. Now, let us see the bill, Mr. FREAR's bill, H. R. 10053, and the companion bill is Senate 3481, of March 3, 1920. Let us see Mr. FREAR's bill. Remember, he says we are going to validate 425 applications, and yet no one, not even Mr. FREAR, will say that section 3 of that bill did more until it was amended than to recognize the 20 permits that had actually issued under the Fall decision. Mr. FREAR's bill, section 2, recognizes the permits just as we did, and then what does he do?

"And to any applicant for a permit who did not receive a permit, on condition that said permittee or applicant, or the party with whom he has contracted, has prior to"—

When?

"Prior to April 1, 1926"—

This was the 5th of March—

"prior to April 1, 1926"—

Done what?

"Done all the following things, to wit, expended money or labor in geologically surveying the lands covered by such application, and has built roads for the benefit of such lands, and has drilled or contributed toward the drilling of geologic structure upon which such wells are located."

I will be fair to the gentleman and say that he put in this proviso:

"Provided further, That the expenditure and operations here made a condition must have been commenced prior to May 27, 1924"— and so the 425 applicants who had not spent a cent prior to May, 1924, could go out there, spend some money for these purposes, and the applications would be validated, provided the money was expended before April 1 of this year.

That is the bill that the gentleman from Wisconsin offered on this subject, and then he says that we proposed in section 3 of the bill of the gentleman from Arizona to validate those applications.

I listened with much interest to his apology when this hearing opened, and I hope he may be given the fullest opportunity to explain any of these matters.

Mr. FREAR. It was not intended to be an apology; it was an explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The commissioner will be allowed to go ahead and not be interfered with. He had no opportunity to question the gentleman from Wisconsin on the floor when he made his speech, and it is fair that he should be allowed to make his now.

Mr. BURKE. On March 5, page 5038 of the RECORD, Mr. FREAR said:

"A cloud of buzzards obscuring the sun may be likened in comparison with the cloud of oil speculators, oil manipulators, and oil promoters who will surround Commissioner Burke and his assistants the moment the oil leasing bill is signed. No such opportunity in a proven oil field has occurred for so these many years and Lo, the poor Indian on the Navajo Reservation, with $771,000 reimbursement heretofore allowed by Commissioner Burke's bureau"—

I didn't know that I appropriated money, did you?

"One hundred and six thousand dollars just loaded on them for two new bridges, and 7,000 uneducated Navajo children with disease and distress on all sides may helplessly witness the doling out of plums to oil promoters while the Indians get 62½ per cent of their 5 per cent royalty or 3 per cent net for their own oil share from about 425 oil speculators who hold Fall's permits for 1,000,000 acres of Navajo lands."

And on March 26, page 6114, Mr. FREAR said:

"Why does Commissioner Burke give away with a liberal hand these royalties of the Indians while he does not whisper as to the tax that shall be collected from the oil exploiters of Indian lands? In either case his position seems as bad as that of Secretary Fall, and in some respects worse, because the Government could stand any amount of oil exploitation under Fall's original order, whereas Indian tribes, against whom Mr. Burke has charged nearly $900,000 reimbursable payments in one tribe's case"—

More than half of it before I was Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and all of it while the gentleman was a Member of the House.

"are suffering from sickness, poverty, and neglect beyond the needs of any other tribes, according to many witnesses."

Then on February 5, 1926, page 3329 of the RECORD, and I have got to be brief, he says:

"One of the darkest pages in the treatment by Congress and the Government of the Indian tribes and their funds is found in some of the worthless and hopeless irrigation projects loaded onto these people whereby funds of the Indians have been dissipated, and they have been obliged by law to stand sponsors for proposals that would never appeal to any business man. Some of these proposals have been endorsed by the Bureau of Indian Affairs and serve as an example of what can be and is being done with the remaining funds and property belonging to some of the Indian tribes."

And on March 5, page 5037, he says:

"Many, many millions of dollars have been charged against the funds of Indian tribes as 'reimbursable' with the consent or connivance of the Indian Bureau, according to information I have received, that are unjust charges and can not be defended. Wasteful irrigation schemes, usually instigated by white people, are made reimbursable in part or entirely out of Indian funds. Not all of them are useless, but many of little value can be pointed out from a glance at the hearings and costs, while helpless Indian tribes are made responsible for projects approved by the Indian Bureau that no business man would approve nor any sane company guarantee from loss."

Gentlemen, most of the irrigation projects, and those that have not been a success, were initiated mostly by Congress by one branch tacking on an amendment to an Indian appropriation bill and then agreeing to it in conference, and without any reference to the Interior Department or without any suggestion from the Interior Department that such project would be desirable. And I want to say here—and no one has more respect for the Congress of the United States than I have, and I again say to this committee, I have as much respect for the House of Representatives as I have for any other legislative body in the world—that the legislation that has resulted disastrously for Indians has without exception been enacted without any approval of the Indian Office, many times over its protest, and without first referring it to the Interior Department.

Take the Clapp Act, if you please, in Minnesota, that removed restrictions of so-called mixed-blood Indians in the White Earth Reservation that resulted in their great estate being dissipated in a very short time, and making of many Indians mendicants who are coming before Congress in every session asking for per capita payments, claiming unless they receive per capita payments there will be distress and suffering, starvation, etc.

I might point to many other instances of where legislation was enacted that was unfortunate, but the Indian Bureau, the Department of the Interior, is not responsible.

I have here copies of letters that were sent to the chairmen of the respective committees of the House and Senate on March 10, suggesting an amendment to clarify the tax matter, and copy of letter written by the Secretary of the Interior to Mr. FREAR calling his attention to it.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

Washington, March 10, 1926.

Hon. JAMES A. FREAR,

House of Representatives,

MY DEAR MR. FREAR: Reference is again made to your letter of February 27, 1926, inclosing copy of H. R. 9133.

I regard as fundamental the determination of the character and extent of the rights of Indians on Executive-order Indian reservations. Manifestly if the rights of Indians on Executive-order reservations are of such character and extent as lawfully to give to the Indians all the oil and gas in these reservation lands, then the Indians are entitled to all of this gas and oil without any deduction or any division. Is this the present state of the applicable law? Do the Indians now possess without additional legislation such rights? For your information I advise you that I have requested the opinion of the Attorney General on the question of the character and extent of the rights now held by Indians on Executive-order Indian reservations. It appears that there is not accord and unanimity of opinion on the law of this subject.

Some question has been raised as to the scope or meaning of the words "in lieu of taxes to the State" as used in section 2, line 2, page 2, of the printed bill, H. R. 9133. As construed and understood by this department this language found in section 2 means that 37½ per cent of the proceeds from rentals, royalties, or bonuses of oil and gas leases upon lands within Executive-order Indian reservations or withdrawals shall be paid to the State, for designated purposes, in lieu of any and all taxes against the Indians, but does not include taxes against others. This being the meaning placed upon the language by the department in order to remove any doubt about this language now in the bill, I suggest and recommend that the words "in lieu of taxes," line 2, page 2, of printed bill, H. R. 9133, be eliminated, and that after the word "located," in line 3, page 2, the following language, followed by a comma, be inserted: "in lieu of any and all taxes against Indians to whose credit 62½ per cent shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as is in this section hereinafter provided."

I have made a supplemental report on H. R. 9133 to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, recommending the amendment above set out, and I herein send to you a copy of this recommendation to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK.

MARCH 10, 1926.

Hon. SCOTT LEAVITT,

Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,

House of Representatives,

MY DEAR MR. LEAVITT: Responsive to your request of February 10, 1926, under date of February 16, I submitted a report on H. R. 9133, entitled "A bill to authorize oil and gas mining leases upon unallotted lands within Executive-order Indian reservations."

Some question has since been raised as to the scope or meaning of the words "in lieu of taxes to the State," as used in section 2, line 3, page 2, of this bill. As construed and understood by this department, the language found in section 2 of this bill simply means that the 37½ per cent of the royalty therein referred to is to be paid to the State, for certain designated purposes, in lieu of any and all taxes against the Indians, but does not include taxes against the white men, lessees or otherwise. This being the true intent in this respect, in order to remove any further doubt about that feature of the bill, it is respectfully suggested that the words "in lieu of taxes" line 3, page 2, of the bill, be eliminated and after the word "located," line 3, page 2, the following be inserted, "in lieu of any and all taxes against the Indians to whose credit 62½ per cent shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as is in this section hereinafter provided."

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK.

The gentleman from Wisconsin discusses the question of incompetents, and again I exonerate him. He accepted information from those in whom he has utmost confidence. He did not seek, apparently, to inform himself as a man of his ability and large experience as a legislator would ordinarily do, and he goes on and discusses the question of incompetents, and without reading too much, or perhaps, not any of the statements that he makes, in effect he says that the Bureau of Indian Affairs makes 225,000 Indians incompetent, and they have not any appeal, can not go into any court, but they are just subject to the whim of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. They are citizens of the United States, but the Indian Bureau has made them incompetent. Gentlemen, you who are new on this committee—I would not say it to these older members—what makes an Indian what we call incompetent is the law, not the Indian Bureau or the Interior Department at all. The law says that trust patent issues to an Indian, with restrictions, for 25 years. The time may be extended or not extended, but until the time expires he can not alienate his land. I recognize that there might be instances where possibly that might be an injustice, and up to 1906 the practice was in every Congress, and I want to give this to the gentleman because it affords him an opportunity to know how he can get an Indian under restriction restored or have his estate turned over to him, because he probably doesn't know it. It was the practice in every Congress, and there were incorporated in Indian appropriation bills cases of Indians by name, in which the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to issue to them a fee patent, and then they got their lands and were thereafter free. I had the honor of being a Member of the House of Representatives, and chairman of this committee, and, living most of my life among the Indians and knowing a little something about conditions, it occurred to me that there ought to be a law by which an Indian who was in fact competent should not be required to go to Congress to get a law passed every time he might want the question of his restoration to rights determined, and I passed what is known as the Burke Act of 1906.

Under that act an Indian who thinks he is competent can make an application, and if it appears to those who are responsible—the Department of the Interior happens to be responsible head under the law to protect the Indian in his estate—so in this law it was provided that when the Secretary of the Interior was satisfied an Indian was capable and competent to manage his own affairs he could issue to him a fee patent for his land and he could do with it as he liked. It was not contemplated when that act was passed that any Secretary of the Interior would issue a patent to an Indian unless he made an application therefor, because the question of the land being exempted from taxation for 25 years was a vested right, and one that the allottees should not be divested of except with his consent, and I did not believe it could be done, either, without his consent. But due to agitation 10 years ago, or a little more, on the part of persons who were misled like my friend from Wisconsin, who said that it was outrageous that Indians were being kept under restrictions and supervision that were just as competent as anybody, the result was that a competency commission was appointed, and it went out and made recommendations until several hundred fee patents were issued in one reservation to 670 Indians where 170 would have been too many, with the result that in most of these instances the allottees did not have anything after a few months, and we are afflicted to-day, gentlemen, because of Indians of that type who are now living on the reservation, who have squandered the proceeds from the sale of their land, and are living off of those who are under restrictions, some of whom may get rations. The courts have held, and I think rightfully, that where an Indian did not ask for his patent or did not accept it willingly that it did not pass the title, and we have been, through the Department of Justice, bringing many suits to recover back lands where patents in fee were issued under those circumstances.

Now, any Indian who makes application for his patent in fee to the Department of the Interior and fails to get it, can go to his Congressman, or, preferably, the able gentleman from Wisconsin, present his case, have a bill introduced, and Congress can pass a law that will free him and he can have his land, even though it has been said that you can not pass a bill in Congress affecting the Indian unless the Bureau of Indian Affairs approves it. It would be possible, gentlemen, there might be a Congress some time that might be independent, more free to act, more indifferent to the opinions of the bureaus and departments, and if that can not be done now, possibly it may be at another time.

The gentleman confuses, as many do, the matter of citizenship with restrictions. True, Congress in 1924 passed a law making all Indians citizens of the United States. Two-thirds of them were citizens before that act passed. Under the old allotment act of 1887, if an Indian was allotted, and it was approved by the Secretary of the Interior, he was a citizen of the United States in every sense of the word. In my State we had many Indians, blanket Indians, who could not speak English, no education or experience, that took allotments under the 1887 act and became citizens, but it did not have anything in the world to do with the Government supervising their affairs, and protecting them in their property, and the Supreme Court has repeatedly passed on the question, and for the information of those who may not be informed, I will incorporate just a few references to court decisions, one in the United States Supreme Court, United States v. Nice (241 U. S. 598); United States v. Noble (237 U. S. 79), and Tiger v. Western Investment Co. (287 U. S. 286); also extract from the act of June 2, 1924, as follows:

The act of Congress approved June 2, 1924 (43 Stats. 253), provides:

"That all noncitizen Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States be, and they are hereby, declared to be citizens of the United States: Provided, That the granting of such citizenship shall not in any manner impair or otherwise affect the right of any Indian to tribal or other property."

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Nice (241 U. S. 598) held:

"Citizenship is not incompatible with tribal existence or continued guardianship, and so may be conferred without completely emancipating the Indians or placing them beyond the reach of congressional regulations adopted for their protection."

"The guardianship of the United States continues, notwithstanding the citizenship conferred upon Indian allottees. (United States v. Noble, 237 U. S. 79.)"

"Citizenship is not in itself an obstacle to the exercise by Congress of its power to enact laws for the benefit and protection of tribal Indians as a dependent people. (United States v. Sandoval, 231 U. S. 48.)"

"Congress has full power to legislate concerning tribal property of Indians and the conferring of citizenship on individual Indians does not prevent Congress from continuing to deal with tribal lands." (Tiger v. Western Investment Co., 287 U. S. 286.)

There is no question about citizenship having anything to do with the authority of the Government in supervising and protecting what is known as the incompetent class of Indians.

Now, I come to another question. Mr. FREAR, on page 5032, said in part as follows:

"That bill (H. R. 7826) proposed to give to what are called Indian judges, who get $10 per month each for their services, the power to impose a penalty of six months in jail or $100 fine—to imprison, without any right of appeal, and with no right of trial by jury, any Indian upon any reservation by reason of that proposed law."

This statement is misleading. Under the regulations and practice, Indians who are convicted in the Indian courts by Indian judges have a right to appeal from the decision of the Indian judges to the superintendent, and if not satisfied with the decision of the superintendent may appeal to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Anyone has a right of appeal from any decision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of the Interior. It will be seen, therefore, that an Indian has three appeals from the decision of the Indian courts.

I will not discuss this at length, because it would take too long, but I will say this, as one who has been most of his life among Indians and has had intimate knowledge of how they live, that I do not know of any one thing that the real Indians of the country—I am not talking about mixed bloods, patent-in-fee Indians, I am talking about full-blood Indians—if there is one thing that I think they take more pride in, it is their Indian court; and they deal fairly and justly, gentlemen, with those who are brought into that court. Since I have been commissioner, a period of more than five years, I do not know of a single instance where an Indian has ever complained that the court in which he had been penalized had done him an injustice. It is self-government; it is something that they themselves control. I have been in the Indian court; no one there but the Indian judges and the Indians who may be interested; no official of the agency present.

I have listened to the proceedings and observed how they deal out justice, and I want to say, gentlemen, that if I were guilty of some offense such as the Indian court has jurisdiction of I would much prefer to have it left to the Indian court than to a Federal or State court, because they are considerate, they are just, and they do not impose ordinarily any penalties that would be considered excessive. But the gentleman from Wisconsin would seek to make the country believe, and the Congress, that there are outrages perpetrated by these Indian judges that ought not to be tolerated in this advanced age of civilization, and he cites a case from his own State, and he puts in the record a telegram from the chief executive of that State in which is recited the conditions that obtained at a jurisdiction there where an Indian was said to have been incarcerated and had shackles with ball and chain attached to him.

Let us see about this case. Incidentally, on March 26, he said:

"I will mention this case, I want to reply to it—that Mr. Burke's bill."

I have a great many bills in Congress, more than when I was a Member of Congress; but, continuing, he said, on March 26, page 6111 of the RECORD:

"That Mr. Burke's bill (H. R. 7826) further seeks to give color of law to the present infamous un-American practice under which Indians have been chained and manacled by Indian agents and by their tool judges within the past 90 days in my own State, and yet Mr. Burke refuses to reply to letters of inquiry from Members of Congress on such cases."

Gentlemen, if I have ever neglected to answer a letter from a Member of Congress since I have been commissioner, I am unconscious of it. If there is such a case, it is an exception. I do not know how it could have happened, and I doubt very much that it did happen; I would have to be shown, because those of you—there are a few of you that occasionally come into the Indian Office, and I wish more of you would come—will say, I think, that there is not any other bureau of the Government that is more prompt in replying to letters than the Bureau of Indian Affairs. We endeavor to reply to them just the moment that it is possible for us to do it when we have the information; we often have to send out to the field.

Let us see. This Indian was named Paul Moore. The telegram from Gov. John J. Blaine, of Wisconsin, regarding Paul Moore's incarceration, is quoted on page 5032 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, this session.

March 5, page 5041:

MADISON, WIS., February 15, 1926.

President CALVIN COOLIDGE,
Washington, D. C.:

Responsible woman, whose work I believe, reports that Paul Moore, an Indian, charged with a misdemeanor, was found on January 26 at Lac du Flambeau (Wis.) Agency jail, in a cell 6 by 8 feet, with clogged toilet, and with ball and chain fastened to ankle. In same jail were incarcerated Indian women. This condition is abhorrent to the dictates of decency and our vaunted civilization. This is the tyranny of the Dark Ages and the practice of the degenerate dominant to terrorize the Indian who needs help more than a jail. In the name of humanity, I beg that that sort of thing cease.

JOHN J. BLAINE, Governor.

The facts in this case are as follows: Paul Moore, together with two other Indians, took three Indian girls of the Lac du Flambeau Reservation and spent three nights with them. One girl is now in a delicate condition and alleges that Paul Moore is responsible therefor. He was apprehended, together with the others, and they confessed their guilt. Moore was sentenced by the court of Indian offenses and was assigned to the potato farm and set to digging potatoes. He escaped and was later returned, when a ball and chain were placed on him. He again escaped and has not yet been returned.

Charges were also made that this jail was not in a habitable condition, and it is stated that males were incarcerated with females, and regarding sanitary conditions, etc., that toilets were not working, and so we got a report on it, first, from the superintendent, and then we had a supervisor go there to investigate it and make a report, furnished him with a copy of the telegram from the distinguished Governor of Wisconsin, and he advised us that the jail is a substantial brick building about 14 feet by 25 feet, with an 11-foot 2-inch ceiling. The floors are cement, the walls are plastered, and the place is well lighted, airy, and dry. The men's compartment is about 15 feet by 13 feet; has two steel cells in which are two bunks of the modern type; mattresses, pillows, and blankets are furnished. The compartment for the women is 13 feet by 9 feet, with modern beds and without cells. It has two windows and is separated from the other part of the building by a solid concrete partition. There is no physical connection between the two sections of the jail.

The superintendent had reported that the jail was in a sanitary condition, that the toilets were in working condition at that time, and that the compartments for men and women were separated by a concrete wall to the ceiling.

The sympathies of Mr. FEAR are with this man who went upon that reservation and outraged an Indian girl and left her and now she is in a condition where they are appealing to the Government to come to her aid and take care of her. I say I have no sympathy for Paul Moore, and I think he ought to be in chains for not the time of the sentence of the Indian court but for a much longer period. Maybe the gentleman from Missouri does not agree with me. It is his privilege. My concern is not for Paul Moore, but for that Indian girl.

Here is a letter from the Rev. James B. Murray, Presbyterian missionary at Lac du Flambeau, Wis., dated March 19, 1926. To whom

It is addressed I do not know, but he signs it, and he says somebody has written him and continues:

"The pages from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, however, brought no fresh news to us, as we have been reading all kinds of articles on conditions here, which have certainly amazed me, and there is no truth or foundation for them whatever.

"Recently I received a letter from a lady who styled herself the admiral of the ship of states"—

She ought to have written John Collier—

"In which she referred to the terrible atrocities reported to have happened here. I am inclosing a copy of my answer to her queries, which you are at liberty to use in any way you wish, and it will no doubt take the place of any comments which you suggested I might make."

The Reverend Mr. Murray inclosed copy of letter to Mrs. Viola Mallory Greene, care of National Ship of States, 2793 Warren Avenue, Chicago, Ill., in which he said in part as follows:

"For instance, I recently picked up a paper and read an account of supposed conditions in this reservation, every word of which was an exaggerated falsehood from start to finish.

"I thank God from the bottom of my heart that I know both sides of the question, and I know Mr. Hammitt"— the superintendent—

"to be a clean, pure-minded, and fair-minded executive, always kind and polite to all, including the lawbreakers who come before him from time to time, and this very morning he has taken three men for a railroad ride, expenses paid, to a town 50 miles distant, where they will be charged with "moonshine" imbibing, which will mean that they will have free board and lodging for some time to come.

"The United States Indian school was never in better or more able hands than at present, and the several departments have never been more ably managed."

Then the concluding paragraph of the letter reads as follows:

"When you take into consideration the 'big job' which the care and oversight of this reservation, with its 800 Indians, and the school, with 170 children to be taught and boarded and cared for night and day, with 25 employees, married and single, all under the direct guidance and supervision of Mr. Hammitt, you can readily understand why I am reluctant to listen to any idle gossip or lying stories when I know the true facts of the case."

We have another case about which statements appeared in the record, a case on Fort Peck Reservation, Mont. Rufus Ricker and Meade Steele were here, and they are some of the witnesses who did not go home, and are still here. They made a statement that an Indian by the name of Benjamin Kills Thunder was arrested. Their statement is in one of Mr. FEAR's speeches.

Mr. HASTINGS. What was the length of the sentence of the Indian court in the last case referred to, the Paul Moore case?

Mr. BURKE. I do not remember whether it appears or not.

Mr. KNUTSON. What was the sentence?

Mr. BURKE. I will put that in the record. Now, these Indians from Fort Peck Reservation made a statement and signed it; no opportunity to examine them at all, they were not under oath. But they made a statement and there was much publicity given to it. I have here a cut from a newspaper, which I will hand to the committee, headed: "FEAR calls on Congress to remove shackles from Indian wards of United States." And here is a picture of the Indians, Ricker and Steele, with the shackles that are mentioned, and in the RECORD of March 5, page 5045, in their letter addressed to Mr. FEAR is this paragraph:

"The last time that Mr. Rufus Ricker, a member of the Fort Peck Indian delegation, happened to see a Fort Peck Indian in chains in the jail, the case was as follows:

"It is about a year and a half ago and the name of the imprisoned Indian was Benjamin Kills Thunder. Benjamin Kills Thunder committed the offense of going off the Fort Peck Reservation without a permit or passport from the Indian superintendent, to visit his relatives at Devils Lake Indian Reservation, N. Dak.

"When Benjamin Kills Thunder returned to the Fort Peck Reservation he was seized and tried in the reservation court and sentenced to the reservation jail, where he was kept chained up. No other charge was alleged against him, etc."

We have investigated the case. In the first place, we have no information or knowledge as to where they got possession of the chains that have been exhibited and were exhibited, I think, at a dinner held here recently, but here is a statement from the superintendent answering a letter we wrote him concerning the matter. He writes under date of March 25, 1926:

"I do not know where these gentlemen got the chains that they claim to have. It is possible that they were taken from the agency jail, but I doubt that very much. We have a number of stay chains here that were used, I am told, many years ago in shackling Indians who were incorrigible."

Gentlemen, 50 or 75 years ago, conditions were different than now.

"As to the statement that these were used in shackling Benjamin Kills Thunder while he was imprisoned at the agency jail, this is a bald lie, and Rufus Ricker and Meade Steele knew they were lying when they made that statement. Mr. Kills Thunder was imprisoned in the agency jail about that time, for illegal cohabitation with a Devils Lake, N. Dak., Indian woman. He escaped from the jail once and the officers had a difficult time capturing him. He should have been put in chains, as he has caused us a great deal of trouble. However, he, nor anyone else, was ever shackled by me or anyone connected with the agency since my administration."

Then we have a statement from an Indian who, I believe, has also been in Washington this winter and was here when this charge was made. He returned to the reservation and wrote back, under date of March 13, 1926, as follows:

POPLAR, MONT., March 13, 1926.

Mr. E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This is to advise that I have investigated the charges made by Rufus Ricker and Meade Steele to the effect that Benjamin Kills Thunder was placed under ball and chain while in the custody of the Indian court at Poplar.

Muskra, who has been Indian judge here for the past four years, advises that the statement is absolutely false, if applied to any time since he was judge; that, in fact, no Indian was ever put under ball and chain since he was judge of the Indian court.

I inclose herewith transcript of docket in justice of peace court in a case wherein Kills Thunder was defendant, and in which instance he served the time in the county jail. This was, of course, a State case and not an Indian matter.

Yours truly,

WILLIAM WHITRIGHT.

Then we are furnished with a certified copy of the docket entry of the justice's court for Roosevelt County, Mont., where this agency is located, wherein it appears that this same Indian was arrested, brought into court, plead guilty, and was sentenced by the court to a term of 30 days in the county jail, and that this happened, I think, some time about August 14, 1924, and here is a copy of the docket entry substantiating what I have said, which I will incorporate in the record, to show to you gentlemen that this Indian, Kills Thunder, for whom there has been so much sympathy expressed, and who has been held up falsely as having been put in chains and shackles, is not a very good citizen, and he about the time this occurred plead guilty in the State court.

The docket entry referred to is as follows:

JUSTICE'S DOCKET TRANSCRIPT
(Page 11)

State of Montana against Benjamin Kills Thunder. Case No. 793 PROCEEDINGS

STATE OF MONTANA,
County of Roosevelt:

In justice's court before John O. Hanson. Action for disturbing the peace. Issued August 14, 1924. Returnable forthwith. Returned August 14, 1924.

J. M. LARSON,
Chief of Police.

(Complete transcript of docket below:)

Be it remembered, That on this 14th day of August, 1924, personally appeared before me, J. M. Larson, who filed written complaint against the defendant, Benjamin Kills Thunder, charging him with having committed the crime of disturbing the peace. Warrant issued.

On being brought into court on the 14th of August, 1924, by chief of police, J. M. Larson, the court advised the defendant as to his rights to counsel and having read the complaint to the defendant, to which he entered a plea of guilty.

It was thereby ordered by the court that the defendant Benjamin Kills Thunder be imprisoned in the county jail of Roosevelt, for a period of 60 days and pay a fine of $15. Failure to pay the fine, he to serve it out according to law.

Done in open court this 14th day of August, 1924.

JOHN O. HANSON,
Justice of Peace.

I hereby swear that the above is a true copy of the above-entitled case, as it appears on the justice docket of Poplar Township.

JOHN O. HANSON.

On the question of money and property of the Indians, Mr. FREAR has had much to say of the $90,000,000 that he says the Bureau of Indian Affairs controls, and he also comments on the value of the Indian estate, said to be valued at $1,600,000,000. Then, as do those who are indifferent as to what becomes of the estate of Indians and those who would not hesitate to defraud them, he falls in line and proposes to abolish the Indian Bureau and turn the Indians loose because he says they are citizens and should be permitted to have control of their property and do with it as they like. It is unnecessary for me to say what a tragedy that would spell if such a thing were permitted.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs does not control the estate of Indians. The Bureau of Indian Affairs is under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, a member of the President's Cabinet, and while it may be going outside a little, I want to say that we have at the head of that department to-day a man from the West, who is a great physician, big hearted, a man who has not only got red blood in him but a great administrator, and I want to say to you that there will not be anything happen while he is Secretary of the Interior that will do injustice to the Indians; everything practically of importance that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does has to be passed upon and approved by the Secretary who by the law is charged with the responsibility, and yet these outside organizations and individuals who have no responsibility, by some people are taken and accepted as authority for matters affecting the Indians and conditions that they say exist without any questions being asked. I will call attention to these misstatements while it is before me. Mr. FREAR says on March 5, page 5039:

"Step one: Indian Commissioner Burke makes the rules and regulations that may be as drastic as the laws of the Medes and Persians, and he is the king bee in this new bureaucratic oligarchy."

It sounds like John Collier; I will not say it is not the language of the gentleman.

Mr. FREAR. That was in reference to a bill, was it not?

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does not make the rules and regulations. They are made by the department and promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior.

"Step two: Mr. Burke appoints the Indian agent. The record of some of these agents smells to heaven if one-third of the complaints received by me are trustworthy."

Why did he put in "trustworthy"? Because he is in error; not intentionally. A man ought not to be responsible for what he does not know.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs does not appoint superintendents. He does not make any appointments in the Indian Service; they are all made by the Secretary of the Interior.

"Step three: Mr. Burke's Indian agent appoints any other agent he desires."

That does not need any answer. He does not appoint anybody except Indian judges and Indian police, and that is all, and yet he says: "possibly a humble tool, at $10 a month to try cases against Indians who infringe on rules hereafter to be made and enumerated by Mr. Burke. Then the jail or rock pile."

Here are some other little matters of interest. Mr. FREAR, on March 26, at page 6111 of the RECORD, said:

"Recently a meeting of real friends of Indians was held at the Hotel Lafayette, this city, at which over 150 guests were at the dinner table. A Mr. Mike Rattigan sought to defend the Indian Bureau from criticisms; and as this is the first defense in the do-nothing, play-the-game bureau yet offered, I quote from a letter of March 11 received by me, which gives this estimate of the outside, disinterested friend of the bureau. It says:

"I also note that a Washington attorney by the name of M. A. Rattigan defended the Indian Bureau. Now, Mr. 'Mike' A. Rattigan bears about the same relation to the oil and gas section of the mineral division of the General Land Office as Mr. Gaston Means did to the Daugherty administration. About 90 per cent of his time is spent in the office of Big Chief McGee. A desk has been set apart for his benefit, and one would think that he was a part of the office; his cases are given priority over all other attorneys having oil and gas cases and appearing before the oil and gas section, and he has got the adjudication clerks 'buffaloed' and afraid of their shadow."

"Again I am giving opportunity for the bureau to disclaim that Mr. Rattigan has the same relation to the bureau that the celebrated witness in the Daugherty case was charged to have to the Department of Justice."

I never saw Mike Rattigan, did not know him, and this was the first time I ever heard of him, and there was no suggestion that he had any connection whatsoever with the Indian Bureau. The letter that Mr. FREAR said he received stated he—Rattigan—had a desk somewhere else in the Interior Department, and yet he wants the commissioner to answer whether or not he "has the same relation to the bureau that the celebrated witness in the Daugherty case was charged to have to the Department of Justice."

I have here—I ought not to refer to it, as it requires no answer from me—on March 25, Mr. FREAR said, page 6109 of the RECORD, in answer to some question:

"Mr. FREAR. It can; but let me say that every Member of the House who presents a bill before the Indian committee has to have any bill he offers first sent to the Indian Bureau, and unless it is recommended for passage by the Indian Bureau he does not stand much chance of getting it through Congress. If there is any member of the committee here, he can deny that. I believe the statement to be substantially true.

"Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman makes a remarkable statement, and I do not know whether he means it to be taken literally or not. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Indian Affairs Committee declines to consider any bill that does not have the O. K. of the Indian Bureau?"

"Mr. FREAR. Practically so; that is, to recommend the bill."

March 26, page 6116:

"Let me not say anything in criticism of any brother Member of Congress. I know the influences urged on every Member. When on the River and Harbor Committee, of which I would now be chairman if I had cared to remain—unless deposed by my colleagues, the honorable House leaders—I learned that practically every member of that committee then, if not now, was placed on the committee at the urgent request of a home constituency which wanted some local waterway improvement. In order to get that improvement every member had to be 'considerate' with the projects of all other members, and when all members of the committee were cared for then a sufficient number of other projects had to be added for other Members of the House also representing constituencies to put the pork barrel through the House."

I do not know what application that has to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and whether it is suggested that this is a committee that makes pork barrel appropriations. They do not make any appropriations; they are all made by the House. Mr. FREAR says further, page 6116, of the RECORD:

"I will not say that members of the Indian committees are not free agents. They are as able as the average major committee of the House, and the committee has some exceptionally valuable members measured by capability and experience."

I am glad to know that some of you gentlemen have qualities that we can designate as being exceptionally valuable.

Page 6116:

"Yet no bill of importance, I assert, as I stated before, can be put through Congress unless it has the O. K. of the Indian Bureau and is stamped with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. When a bill is introduced and referred to the committee, as stated at the outset, it automatically goes to the Indian Bureau to get its approval or disapproval. The bureau is the czar of congressional bureaucratic subsergency. No important bill for Indians has any chance for passage until approved by the bureau."

"Every member of the committee must humble himself and his case, however meritorious, before the Indian Bureau and woe be it to any member who steps far off the Indian Bureau reservation. Unless 'regular' in conduct his own Indian projects are subject to the blue pencil of the autocrat of the bureau. Of 35 bills reported to date by the Indian Affairs Committee, only one failed to have the indorsement of the bureau and that bill has been held up for weeks in the Senate by the bureau. I do not need further to discuss the bureau's influence over the committee."

Gentlemen, I am not going to comment on that. I did say in my letter that some of the statements made by Mr. FREAR are not only misleading, but I did say that some of them are untrue, and I think all of the foregoing statements are untrue.

He makes the statement February 5, page 3330 of the RECORD, that—

"In the appropriation act of 1925 there is authorized an expenditure of $140,000 of Indian trust money exclusively for Indian Bureau salaries, this being additional allowance."

This statement is clearly misleading. That is simply an allowance that had to be made to pay the increase in salaries that you authorized when you passed the classification bill. It was necessary to appropriate the $140,000 in order to meet the increases. That is all there is to that statement.

Then there is another misstatement in the speech of March 5, page 5040 of the RECORD, in which he quotes an Indian named Hendricks, and he is still here, I think, from the Klamath Reservation, Oreg., as follows:

"Hendricks is quoted by the press as saying that $17,000,000 worth of timber has been sold from the Klamath Reservation in Oregon. When he asked Commissioner Burke for a statement he was told the amount to his tribe's credit was only $243,000. When the chapter on oil based on Commissioner Burke's new proposal is written, wherein 95 per cent of all the oil produced goes to the oil exploiter while the Indians of all the tribes pay 37½ per cent out of the remaining 5 per cent, or more, with which to cover the oil exploiter's taxes, then the Indians will find a real cause of action that compared with the Klamath Tribe's statement will smell to heaven."

The facts are that up to December 31, 1925, there has been credited to the tribal fund from the sale of timber $3,407,389; $400,000 of the amount has been reimbursed to the United States for moneys appropriated for industrial purposes. There has been paid in per capita payments in cash to the Klamath Indians during the last five years $1,450,834.98. The expenses of timber operations as well as administration and other expenses on the Klamath Reservation are paid from tribal funds. There is to the credit of the Klamath Indians at this time in the Treasury $400,800.

The gentleman could have gotten the correct information by writing or phoning down to the Indian Office, but as usual he accepts anyone who makes a statement, especially if he is of Indian blood, that it must be true or he would not make it. Indians are like anybody else. They are just as human as any other race of people, and they are no more reliable than people generally, and they are just as reliable, generally speaking, as are other people.

On March 26 he said, page 6116 of the RECORD:

"When the bureau wants support, it calls in a board of antediluvian Indian commissioners, who travel around with Indian agents looking over the reservations."

"These 'commissioners,' I am informed, serve without pay and have long been under the hypnotic spell of the Indian Bureau. Notwithstanding a wealth of evidence of bureau neglect has disclosed frightful neglect of the Nation's wards, sickness, blindness, and deaths of Indians almost beyond belief, these 'commissioners,' like some of the bureau 'missionaries,' suffer from bureau trachoma, that sees not the things that should be seen. They complain of the Indian's religious belief, without discovering he is chained and manacled by the agent and by the bureau. They pray for his soul but neglect his body before it is too late."

I do not need to defend the Board of Indian Commissioners. The board is made up of men and one lady who are persons of high standing in the country, appointed by the President of the United States, who serve without pay and spend a great deal of time every year going into the Indian country, and they do not hesitate to criticize and make suggestions and are absolutely independent of the Indian Bureau or the Department of the Interior, and are answerable only to the President of the United States. In order that you may know who they are I will give their names and places of residence, as follows:

"MEMBERS OF BOARD OF INDIAN COMMISSIONERS"

"George Vaux, jr., Bryn Mawr, Pa., chairman.

"Warren K. Moorehead, Andover, Mass.

"Samuel A. Elliot, Cambridge, Mass.

"Frank Knox, Manchester, N. H.

"Daniel Smiley, Mohonk Lake, N. Y.

"Hugh L. Scott, Princeton, N. J.

"Clement S. Ucker, Savannah, Ga.

"Flora Warren Seymour, Chicago, Ill.

"John J. Sullivan, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Malcolm McDowell, Washington, D. C., secretary."

On March 26, page 6190 of the RECORD, the gentleman said:

"An ex-governor is called in by a committee to say he knows 34,000 Navajos are anxious to give 50 per cent of their oil royalties if the bureau thinks best. These and others of that kind of Indian friends are ready to defend the Indian Bureau's chains, manacles, and highway robberies of its American citizen slaves now ruled and cowed by bureau $10-a-month 'judges.'"

This refers to H. A. Hagerman, of Santa Fe, N. Mex. Mr. Hagerman is a former governor of the State of New Mexico, a man of high character, and his reputation has never been assailed, so far as I know, a member of the Pueblo lands board engaged in solving the problems of the titles of the pueblos, and, incidentally, commissioner to the Navajos; he came here at the request of the department for the sole purpose of considering whether or not we ought to have further oil development in the Navajo Reservation by the making and sale of additional oil leases, and to discuss the details; and while here he was calling, as I understand it, at the Senate upon his friend, Senator BRATTON, who requested him to appear before the committee, which he did, and was interrogated with reference to this proposed leasing proposition on Executive-order reservations, and did say that he had talked with Chee Dodge and some other members of the Navajo business committee, and they were entirely satisfied with the proposition contained in the bill as it was originally introduced, and that they would be satisfied if they only got 50 per cent. This is the way this distinguished, faithful, conscientious public official is characterized by my friend from Wisconsin.

I had some excerpts here. I do want to mention something that came in his extended remarks of April 6. He puts in some correspondence referring to the case of one Frank Murray. The Murrys were here early in the winter and called on me with Senator LENROO, and the man was paralyzed, just able to totter, his old wife supporting him; came in and appealed to me to know if I would not make a report that would enable the old gentleman to have some chance of getting relief that he claimed he was entitled to, because at one time he was removed from his reservation. And, gentlemen, not having very much sympathy for such Indians as Paul Moore, at Lac du Flambeau, or such as Benjamin Kills Thunder, at Fort Peck, I have sympathy for a decrepit, aged old man, whether he is an Indian, white, or whatever he is, and this case did appeal to me; and I said to Senator LENROO that I would endeavor to make a report in the case that would, at least, I think, make it possible for it to be considered by Congress without prejudice that might attach if there was an unfavorable report from the department or Bureau of the Budget.

I wrote up a report and sent it upstairs and Assistant Secretary Edwards was not satisfied with the report and it was returned, and on March 6, the Senator wrote Mrs. Murray and said the commissioner had advised him confidentially "that he had written a report upon the bill for Frank, but his report had not met with the approval of the Secretary, who makes the report to Congress, and he was compelled to rewrite it in such a way as to secure the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

If I had any conversation with Senator LENROOT, which I probably did, I did not refer to the Secretary of the Interior Department, but to the Assistant Secretary, and told him the circumstances, and yet Mr. FREAR in his speech says, page 6969, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 6:

"Here follows the usual self-serving declaration from the bureau, for it seems incredible that Secretary Work would take into his own hands a detail of this kind properly belonging to the Indian Bureau, although correspondence is ordinarily conducted through the department head."

In other words, he wanted to discredit the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in some way in this proposition, and says it is incredible that Secretary Work would do anything of the kind. In this same speech, and I am a little surprised that a man who would take exception to a letter from me to the chairman of the Indian Committee getting into a newspaper in his district, would cause to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter written to me on the same date he made the speech, and I read it in the RECORD an hour before I received the letter, indicating that the relations of the writer of that letter, who was Judson King, associated with John Collier, had written it and it appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in his extended remarks the day before I received it and the same day the letter was written, postmarked 6.30 p. m. that day, April 6.

To clear that up, here is a copy of Mr. Edwards's memorandum that came back with this bill, and he sent it to me and said that I was at liberty to read it to the committee so as to show that the commissioner was not justly subject to the insinuation that is implied in the remarks of the gentleman.

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 24, 1926.

Memorandum for Commissioner Burke.

The bill reported on provides for the payment to Frank Murray, a member of the Bad River Band of Chippewa Indians, of the sum of $3,000 to compensate him for injury to his business and property by reason of his "illegal removal from said reservation on February 11, 1909."

It will be noted that he is being compensated for damages resulting to him for "his illegal removal" from the reservation. In the report coming from the Indian Office I find the following statements:

"Murray and his wife conducted a hotel and restaurant within the reservation. Complaints were made that intoxicated persons were constantly congregating there, and that liquor was being sold to Indians and others. In 1907 Murray was indicted on the charge of introducing whisky into Indian country in violation of the law. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced, but sentence was suspended. Murray, with others, was removed from the reservation."

It also appears from your report that on December 2, 1911, after his removal from the reservation he was permitted to reenter or return to the reservation.

I have read your report with care and I can see no justification whatever, if the facts are as alleged in the report, for a favorable report on this bill. If it be true that this man was indicted on the charge of introducing whisky in the Indian country, and he pleaded guilty and was removed, I assume for the good of the Indians, then there can be no basis in my opinion for the payment of these damages. At least a stronger showing should be made before this bill is favorably reported upon. While no direct favorable recommendation for the passage of this legislation is made in your report, you do say, "The department offers no objection to its receiving consideration by the Congress." That is a half favorable report in my judgment, especially when linked with the statement that "there is some merit in his contentions."

Of course this bill must be reported on, but the facts alone should constitute the report without any recommendation. The report should be neutral—neutral as a glass of distilled water.

The report is returned for changes along the lines here suggested.

EDWARDS,
Assistant Secretary.

I caused the report to be rewritten as suggested by Mr. Edwards, making it neutral and not containing any recommendation. Later, he advised me that, under the policy of the department, it had been determined that in all reports referring to claims of this kind there would have to be a definite recommendation and therefore he would be obliged to rewrite the report, making an adverse recommendation, which was done, and the report was signed by the Secretary and sent to the chairman of the Committee on Claims.

I will conclude in a moment. I would like to read for the information of the committee a telegram that came from Mr. Hagerman before he arrived here, as follows:

SANTA FE, N. MEX., March 4, 1926.

INDIAN OFFICE,

Washington, D. C.:

Very satisfactory talks with Chee Dodge and Dasline. Believe reimbursable tribal fund and lease amendment matters can be satisfactorily settled with Indians if some reasonable adjustments are made by department and Congress. Indians are perfectly satisfied with 62½ per cent royalties in Executive-order lands and anxious that matter be settled. Writing fully.

HAGERMAN.

I want to say to this committee that it is my opinion that what actuates the representative, Mr. Collier, of this so-called Indian defense society, are selfish motives, and that his campaign of propaganda is because he hopes to create a distrust on the part of the people that the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Indian Affairs are not safeguarding the interests of the Indians and that they are being, to use the expression, robbed and outraged, and that the bureau is seeking in the interests of oil companies, at the expense of the Indians, to exempt them from taxation and other similar extravagant statements, all for the purpose of laying the foundation of going to the country, as frequently is done by others, and appealing for money that they may themselves enjoy the benefits thereof, and I hold in my hand, in confirmation of what I have just stated, a document issued by this Indian defense society, headed: "The Indian crisis in Congress," and containing false, untrue, and misleading statements, and if the receiver of these documents has any doubt of the information it carries, they are, I presume, referred to speeches of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, a member of this committee. I happen to know of an instance where Mr. Collier was endeavoring to interest a party by making his declarations of conditions about which he was complaining, and that the party later called on me, told of his conversation with Mr. Collier, who he stated had handed him a copy of the speech of the gentleman from Wisconsin, dated March 5.

In the appeal for funds is a statement appealing about the starving Pimas, misleading, because Dirk Lay, a missionary whom he quotes, in a hearing before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, made the statement that there is no actual starvation but not enough food, and yet they make representations to the effect that those Indians are dying from starvation, due to the neglect of the Government to furnish them with water, when we are expediting in every way possible the construction of the Coolidge Dam in order that we may supply water for them; and here is one of the statements:

"And also to-day Secretary Work has secured further delay on technical quibbles, while the Pimas die."

This dam is going to cost five and a half million dollars. Secretary Work is responsible for its construction, and I say he is justified, and he could be censured for doing otherwise than, to see that the preliminaries and the details are properly examined into, and the type of dam is one that will prove what we want it to be, something that will last for all time, and I say to you, and Rev. Dirk Lay knew it, that the Secretary and everybody connected with the department is doing everything possible that is humanly possible to proceed speedily and to get appropriations sufficient to complete this dam at the earliest possible date.

Then Mr. Collier says in this circular at the end of it:

"We are fighting a powerful combination of bureaucrats, politicians, exploiting interests, and newspaper silence bent on 'putting over' the most astounding wholesale program of loot and tyranny this century has known in Indian affairs."

"This is not an ordinary year—at all costs we must defeat the wholesale confiscation of reservation lands."

"THE AMERICAN INDIAN DEFENSE ASSOCIATION (INC.),

"HAVEN EMERSON, M. D., President.

"JOHN COLLIER, Executive Secretary."

Then "Tear off and mail," etc.

And the person who is deceived and misled and feels that they ought to contribute signs this blank:

"Inclosed find check for $—— to help defeat the wholesale confiscation of Indian lands and to educate the people of this Nation to an enlightened Indian policy. Signed, etc."

"To American Indian Defense Association, Robert Ingersoll Brown, treasurer, 67 Morton Street, New York, or 637 Munsey Building, Washington, D. C."

I did not know they had a treasurer. I supposed the secretary handled the funds—637 Munsey Building is John Collier's address. If you happen to have the names or know of any other suckers, fill out this blank, etc. Then follows the phrase: "Tell these friends they might help: Name; address; occupation."

So John sends the propaganda to them, and I presume it results in an accumulation of a considerable fund, and Congress does not know anything about what becomes of it, who contributes to it, or what use is made of it; and if there is not a law, there ought to be a law that would preclude people under false pretenses from using the mails to solicit money as is contemplated in this document.

THE INDIAN CRISIS IN CONGRESS

WHAT SHALL WE CALL THIS, ANNIHILATION OF THE PIMA INDIANS?—A SAMPLE OF INDIAN BUREAU GUARDIANSHIP

The death rate among the Pima Indians of Arizona is appalling. An acute crisis exists. No accurate vital statistics of the tribe as a whole are available, but—

Recent investigations reported by Rev. Dr. Dirk Lay, for 16 years resident Presbyterian missionary on the Pima Reservation, show that in one township, which contains a third of the tribe, one-fourth of the Indians have died in the past four and one-half years. (See accompanying map.) This means an annual death rate of 59 per thousand, as against the average annual death rate among white people of 12 per thousand for Arizona and the whole United States.

This fatality is not caused by a sudden epidemic, but by slow starvation over a period of years plus an acute condition of utter hopelessness and heartbreak during the past 18 months, due to the failure of the Indian Bureau to execute the relief Congress ordered.

The Pimas are agricultural Indians, dependent absolutely on the Gila River to water their desert lands, which they have cultivated successfully for ages.

The Pimas have a legal and moral right to the use of the river, but for the past 35 years, by a neglect tantamount to conspiracy, the Indian Bureau "guardian" has permitted the upstream white settlers gradually to usurp use of the Indian water until to-day the Pimas are unable to subsist on lands which had not only amply supported them but supplied a surplus for outside sale.

In 1924 Congress ordered a storage dam built for the Pimas—to be called the Coolidge Dam—to cost $5,500,000, in order specifically to give relief to the suffering Pimas.

On March 25, 1926, due to the criminal neglect of the Indian Bureau, not a bucket of concrete has been poured.

And also to-day Secretary Work has secured further delay on technical quibbles while the Pimas die, and Assistant Indian Commissioner Edgar B. Meritt tells Congress "there are no starving Indians on this reservation (Pima), and there are no starving Indians in the United States."

The Pimas stood by the Union cause in the Civil War. It is a matter of official record that in 1863 they furnished the United States Government 600,000 pounds of wheat on credit. They never attacked the white pioneers; never shed a drop of white blood. And this is how we treat them.

AND WHAT IS THIS BUT ROBBERY AND OPPRESSION OF ALL INDIANS—DESTRUCTIVE INDIAN BUREAU STATESMANSHIP

The Indian Bureau is sponsoring and attempting to jam through this Congress a bill (H. R. 9133) which would destroy any Indian title or claim to any vested right or interest in unallotted lands in Executive-order reservations. It affects 23,000,000 acres in 10 States, comprising two-thirds of the undivided lands remaining to American Indians in the entire United States.

If enacted, the Indians, by Executive order, can be hurled from the homes like trespassers, and by another Executive order leases may be granted to oil, coal, timber, water-power, grazing-land, and other promoters.

It is manifest that no Indian problem is comparable with the immediate necessity of defeating this attempt at wholesale dispossession. For two generations—and in some instances for centuries—the Indians have in good faith occupied these lands as theirs at the hands of the United States Government.

A hard fight is imminent. The bureau, a powerful oil lobby, and Secretary Work are back of this effort to accomplish by law what Albert B. Fall, Work's predecessor, failed to do by departmental order.

OIL INCOME TAX OF 37½ PER CENT

The bureau also proposes in this bill that the Indians on such reservations be taxed 37½ per cent on all oil and gas royalties they may receive—which money is to be turned over to the States in which the reservations lie—and the white producers go scot-free of taxes, State or Federal.

CONFISCATING CITIZENSHIP

The Indian Bureau is further pressing hard for the enactment at this session of measures of a most oppressive character which continue its despotic control of Indian life, deprive Indians of the equal protection of the laws, and make a ghastly farce of the law of 1924 granting citizenship to Indians.

By one of these (H. R. 7826) any reservation agent, or his deputies, including $10 a month "judges," may jail an Indian for six months without stated cause, warrant, or trial. By another (H. R. 8050) an Indian or any white person can be imprisoned one year and fined $1,000 for interfering with an employee of the bureau, and can be fined $2,000 and imprisoned one year for attempting to "rescue or destroy any article or property" belonging to an Indian and seized by the bureau.

CONSTRUCTIVE LAWS NEEDED

As against such measures advocated by Commissioner Burke and Meritt the American Indian Defense Association is actively supporting bills introduced by fair-minded Congressmen and Senators which will protect the property of the Indians, grant them civil rights, religious liberty, and the protection of the courts consistent with their present status of American citizenship. These laws extend to them a fair opportunity to exist, to develop their lives, and to assimilate white civilization in a natural fashion without being robbed, cowed, and maltreated through the neglect or overt acts of their alleged guardian and "friend"—the Indian Bureau, and its 5,000 employees. These proposed laws are:

(a) An act (H. R. 10053, S. 3431) establishing a method of leasing Indian oil and gas lands, equitable to all concerned, providing equal taxation for white and red men.

(b) An act (H. R. 10199) vesting in the Indians a title to Executive-order reservations identical with their title to treaty reservations.

(c) An act (H. R. 9315) establishing civil liberty for the Indians, bringing them under the State and Federal laws, safeguarding their tribal cultures, abolishing the Indian Bureau's power to jail them without trial, to virtually enslave them for unspecified offenses, and to domineer over their religious life.

(d) Two acts (H. R. 8823 and 9601) establishing due process of law for Indians in matters of leasing their lands, making their wills, and determining their heirs.

(e) Two acts (S. 3020, H. R. 8821, S. 3611) bringing the States of California and Wisconsin into action for the social welfare of Indians, as a precedent for bringing other States into similar action.

THE BATTLE IN WASHINGTON

The American Indian Defense Association is bearing the brunt of the legislative battle at Washington to defeat the destructive program of the Indian Bureau and to enact constructive, enlightened legislation which will conserve the lives and property of Indians and redeem our promises to them.

We are fighting a powerful combination of bureaucrats, politicians, exploiting interests, and newspaper silence bent on "putting over" the most astounding wholesale program of loot and tyranny this century has known in Indian affairs.

This is not an ordinary year—at all costs we must defeat the wholesale confiscation of reservation lands.

What I have said is in rather a rambling way. It is impossible to cover everything incorporated in the several speeches or extended remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin. I think I have covered some of the important statements that he has made, and if there are other things I have not covered and you have any doubt about them, you can probably ascertain yourselves as to the truth of the statements.

I thank the committee, and if any members of the committee desire to interrogate me they may do so, and as far as it is possible for me I will try to answer questions.

WEDNESDAY, April 14, 1926.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. I understand Mr. Burke wishes to make a brief statement of two or three minutes. If there is no objection, Commissioner Burke will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in what I said on Saturday I was endeavoring to confine my remarks to the statements made in the several speeches that appeared in the RECORD, made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]. Incidentally, I presented a leaflet that was being circulated apparently for the purpose of soliciting funds by the Indian Defense Association, and in that circular there is a misleading statement with reference to the condition of the Pima Indians, and as I did not discuss it, I want to put in the RECORD one page from the hearings before the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee on the Interior Department bill, held in March, and the portion that I refer to appears on March 11, 1926; I am not certain of the date; it begins on page 175 and goes over to page 176. If you would like it to be read, I will read it.

Mr. KNOTSON. If it is not too long, I would like to have it read.

Mr. BURKE. I will read it—Mr. Meritt, Assistant Commissioner, was before the committee and was interrogated as follows:

"DEATH RATE AMONG INDIANS"

"Senator HARRIS. I should like to ask just what the death rate among the Indians is now, compared with the white death rate.

"Mr. MERITT. I have the data here, Mr. Chairman. The death rate among the Indians is not very much greater than among the whites. In recent years we have very materially reduced the death rate among the Indians. The Indians now are increasing in population at the rate of several thousand a year. I will get the exact figures and put them in the record for you.

"Senator HARRIS. If you please.

"Senator SMOOT. You speak of the death rate as covering the whole country, not any particular section?

"Mr. MERITT. Yes.

"Senator PHIPPS. But in answer to the Senator's question, Mr. Meritt is going to supply the information as to the Pima Indians.

"Mr. MERITT. I thought your inquiry related to Indians throughout the United States.

"Senator HARRIS. Yes; that is what I meant.

"Mr. MERITT. I will put that in the record.

"Senator PHIPPS. Did you not want it also as related to the Pima Indians separately?

"Senator HARRIS. Yes; I should like to have that, because the statement made yesterday was rather alarming.

"Mr. MERITT. I will put the information in the record."

The information referred to was subsequently furnished by Mr. Meritt as follows:

"RE DEATH RATE AMONG PIMA INDIANS"

"The apparently excessive death rate among the Pima Indians during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1925, as shown by the census report for that year is not real, but is due to the correction of former census rolls by the recent superintendent, Mr. C. E. Faris.

"When Mr. Faris took charge of Pima he found that former census reports were erroneous in that they had continued to carry a large number of Indians as living who were really dead, some of them having died years ago. Realizing the importance of having accurate rolls, he at once began the making of a corrected roll or census. By exhaustive inquiry, whenever and wherever opportunity offered, he secured data by which he was enabled to make a census roll that is much nearer to being exact than any previous roll, though admittedly not entirely correct even now, but in doing so he had to place the names of the dead Indians on the roll with the appropriate notations as to the approximate dates of death. Accordingly the last census roll shows 420 Indians who died prior to June 30, 1924, but who were carried on that roll as living at that date; 88 deaths are reported from June 30, 1924, to June 30, 1925, but the exact date of a number of these deaths is not known, and it is quite probable that a number of them occurred prior to the beginning of the census year.

"The roll of June 30, 1925, also shows 182 additions by births, of which 129 were born prior to June 30, 1924, but which had not been enrolled on the census of that date, leaving 53 births as having occurred during the census year ending June 30, 1925.

"To recapitulate briefly, the census report of June 30, 1925, drops approximately 508 from the roll by death, 420 which should have been dropped on the census for June 30, 1924, and reports 182 additions by birth, 129 which should have been reported on the previous census. These figures indicate that there were 88 deaths during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and that during the same period there were 53 births; but as stated above, some of the deaths shown probably occurred during the previous year. The total census of living Indians as of June 30, 1925, is 4,515.

"The death rate among Indians throughout the United States during the fiscal year 1925 was 24.84 per thousand, while in 1913 the death rate among Indians was 32.24 per thousand."

This hearing has been held and this information was available at the time that the sheet I refer to was published, and the Rev. Dirk Lay was present at the hearings. I would like also to add in connection with this Pima question as to their starving, etc., a clipping from the El Paso Herald on March 15, 1926, which is as follows:

[From the Herald, El Paso, Tex., March 15, 1926]

PIMA INDIANS IN GILA VALLEY ARE STARVING, DENIED—STORIES FROM WASHINGTON TELL HARROWING TALE OF PEOPLE

"PHOENIX, ARIZ., March 15 (SP).—From Washington, in connection with efforts to secure early action on the San Carlos Dam appropriations, have come some stories evidently not intended for Southwestern consumption. They tell of starvation among the Pima people of the Gila Valley, and of a decrease of 25 per cent in population within the past four years. One touching tale is of how living infants have been buried with their emaciated dead mothers. The reason set forth for this deplorable condition was the lack of water for irrigation of the Indian farms, this water drained from the Gila River by predatory white farmers upstream.

"The fact that the white farmers have taken the low-stage waters almost entirely away from the Indians is not disputed. This is a condition that has been known for about 30 years, and is the main reason for construction of the San Carlos Dam, under which the Pimas will be assured water for the cultivation of about 40,000 acres. But, according to the persons well informed concerning the tribe, the lack of water simply has turned the Pimas toward other occupations than farming.

"LAUGH AT FAMINE"

"Indians of high standing, including students at the Cook Bible School, laugh at the reports of famine on the reservation, stating that the Pimas are getting along very well, many of them employed on new reclamation and railroad work, looking forward to the time when an ample water supply shall be available for their little farms. It is declared that there is absolutely no destitution that would involve starvation.

"The tribe, including a branch on a small reservation on Salt River, 10 miles east of Phoenix, has a membership of about 5,000. Save occasional relief for the aged, it never has drawn rations from the National Government, and it ever has been friendly to the whites and helpful in the warfare against the Apache."

There is one further statement, Mr. Chairman, that I overlooked. In the speech of Mr. FARMER on March 5 he made this statement: "The Indians in some instances are dying rapidly, and in one State the number has decreased from 100,000 to 17,000, due to disease."

This is a misleading statement, and if there is any basis for it whatsoever it must be with reference to Indians in California, and must refer to the early period when it was generally understood that in the mad rush for gold there was more or less conflict between the whites and Indians, and, possibly, a great many Indians were killed; I do not know, but in recent years there has been no large decrease in the Indian population of California from any cause, and I therefore say the statement is misleading. In the same paragraph he made a statement that "the American Indian since the Bureau of Indian Affairs was established has decreased three-fourths in population by sickness and neglect." That is absolutely untrue, as statistics show that the Indian population has increased and is increasing. In the matter of giving to the Indian proper medical attention, the department is governed by appropriations provided by Congress. By reason of the department's activity the appropriation for relief of distress and medical attention among the Indians has been increased from $40,000 in 1910 to $700,000 annually at present.

Mr. HAYDEN. I intended to ask you some questions in regard to the starving Pimas, but I think you have covered the matter rather fully. I can only add that I was born within 5 miles of the Pima Indian Reservation, and my first nurse was a Pima Indian woman. I have known those Indians all of my life, and I have no better friends than members of that tribe, and I am sure if they were in a starving condition they would not fail to let me know about it. I have not heard anything from any Indian of the Pima Tribe or from anyone else authorized to speak for them that bears out the statements that have been broadcasted of widespread starvation among them.

Now, I want to ask you a question with respect to the Navajo Indians, because it has been presented to this committee that they have been greatly abused. Have you any record of the amount of money that has been appropriated by Congress in the way of gratuity appropriations for the benefit of the Navajo Indians?

Mr. BURKE. We have.

Mr. HAYDEN. What does that aggregate?

Mr. BURKE. Approximately, in the last 15 years, something more than $10,000,000 has been appropriated for the Navajo Indians as gratuity appropriation, not reimbursable or charges to them in any manner whatsoever.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 31, 1925.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Attention is invited to the decision of former Secretary Fall in the appeal of E. M. Harrison from the decision of the General Land Office of January 14, 1922, in which his application for a prospecting permit under section 13 of the act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 437), for a tract of land in township 45 south, range 22 east, S. 1. M., Utah, was rejected. The application was rejected by the commissioner because the land was within a part of the Navajo Indian Reservation withdrawn from the public domain by Executive order of May 17, 1884.

On June 9, 1922, the Secretary reversed the decision of the commissioner, basing his action on the ground that the act of February 25, 1920, did not expressly exclude from the provisions thereof land within Indian reservations. He speaks of the method by which Indian reservations may be created and established, viz, by treaty, by legislative enactment, and by Executive order, and after discussing them holds that Indian reservations created by treaty or by legislative enactment are not subject to the provisions of the general leasing act but that Indian reservations created by Executive order are so subject.

As a reason for this holding, it is stated that the President by Executive order could convey no title to the land set apart for the use of the Indians and that the United States can not be held to have reserved for Indian purposes the minerals beneath the surface. Mention is made of the act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. 795), which provides for leasing of unallotted lands on Indian reservations "occupied by Indians who have bought and paid for the same," and the Secretary concludes therefore that Congress having recognized the right of the Indians on such reservations to the mineral resources, the general leasing act does not apply thereto. Apparently it is contended that the distinction between Executive order and other Indian reservations, so far as the minerals contained therein are concerned, is that Congress has recognized by the act of February 28, 1891, the right of the Indians on treaty reservations to the mineral proceeds, whereas it has not so recognized the rights of Indians on Executive-order reservations.

By section 26 of the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L. 3-31), the Secretary of the Interior was authorized and empowered to lease unallotted land on any reservation within Arizona, New Mexico, and certain other States for the purpose of mining valuable metalliferous minerals. It is provided therein that the lessee shall pay to the United States for the benefit of the Indians certain royalties and rentals therein prescribed. The act applies to a number of reservations created by Executive order and the right of the Indians occupying such reservations to the proceeds of the mining of metalliferous minerals is thus clearly recognized by Congress. The act does not authorize the leasing of lands for any of the minerals covered by the general leasing act of February 25, 1920.

As to the difference of Indian title to reservations created by treaty, legislative enactment, and Executive order, attention is invited to the following excerpt from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in re Wilson (140 U. S. 575):

"With respect to the first question, it may be observed that the White Mountain Indian Reservation was a legally constituted Indian reservation. True, when the Territory of Arizona was organized, on February 24, 1863 (12 Stat. 664, ch. 56), there was no such reservation, and it was created in the first instance by order of the President in 1871. Whatever doubts there might have been, if any, as to the validity of such Executive order, are put at rest by the act of Congress of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. 388, ch. 119, par. 1), the first clause of which is 'That in all cases where any tribe or band of Indians has been or shall hereafter be located upon any reservation created for their use, either by treaty stipulations or by virtue of an act of Congress or Executive order setting apart the same for their use, the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized, whenever in his opinion any reservation, or any part thereof, of such Indians is advantageous for agricultural and grazing purposes, to cause said reservation, or any part thereof, to be surveyed, or resurveyed if necessary, and to allot the lands in said reservation in severalty to any Indian located thereon, in quantities, as follows:'

"The necessary effect of this legislative recognition was to confirm the Executive order and establish beyond challenge the Indian title to this reservation."

In his decision the Secretary referred, among others to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Spalding v. Chandler (100 U. S. 394). Attention is invited to the following excerpts from the opinion of the court in that case:

"It has been settled by repeated adjudications of this court that the fee of the lands in this country in the original occupation of the Indian tribes was from the time of the formation of this Government vested in the United States. The Indian title as against the United States was merely a title and right to the perpetual occupancy of the land with the privilege of using it in such mode as they saw fit until such right of occupation had been surrendered to the Government. When Indian reservations were created, either by treaty or Executive order, the Indians held the land by the same character of title, to wit, the right to possess and occupy the lands for the uses and purposes designated.

"The reservation thus created stood precisely in the same category as other Indian reservations, whether established for general or limited uses, and whether made by the direct authority of Congress in the ratification of a treaty or indirectly through the medium of a duly authorized executive officer."

From the foregoing quotations it would seem that the United States Supreme Court holds that the Indian title to Executive-order reservations is the same as that to reservations created by treaty or by act of Congress.

But it is not only in the right to the proceeds of mineral development that Congress has recognized the Indian title to reservations both treaty and Executive order. Section 7 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 855-857), provides:

"Sec. 7. That the mature living and dead and down timber on unallotted lands of any Indian reservation may be sold under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the proceeds from such sales shall be used for the benefit of the Indians of the reservations in such manner as he may direct: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin."

Congress thus expressly recognizes the right of Indians occupying Executive order reservations to the proceeds of the sale of timber. It is universally recognized that standing timber is a part of the realty. The Supreme Court in the case of the United States v. Cook (19 Wall. 591), in considering the question as to the right of Indians to sell timber from their reservations, said: "Timber while standing is a part of the realty, and it can only be sold as the land could be."

Congress has repeatedly recognized the right of Indians living on Executive-order reservations to the proceeds from the sale of the surplus lands of said reservations. For citations in support of this statement attention is invited to the following acts:

The acts of February 20, 1893 (27 Stat. L. 469); March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. L. 894), and June 10, 1896 (29 Stat. L. 358), in connection with reservations in Arizona.

The acts of June 17, 1892 (27 Stat. L. 52); October 1, 1890 (26 Stat. L. 658); February 8, 1905 (33 Stat. L. 706), and April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L. 224), and in connection with Executive-order reservations in California.

The acts of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L. 335), and February 23, 1889 (25 Stat. L. 687), regarding Executive-order reservations in Idaho.

The acts of April 20, 1904 (33 Stat. L. 225), and May 27, 1902 (32 Stat. L. 260), regarding Executive-order reservations in Nevada.

The acts of June 1, 1910 (36 Stat. L. 455), and April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L. 194), regarding Executive-order reservations in North Dakota.

The acts of February 13, 1891 (26 Stat. L. 758), and March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. L. 562), in connection with Executive-order reservations in Oklahoma.

The acts of August 15, 1894 (28 Stat. L. 323), appropriated moneys for the Siletz Indians in Oregon for the cession of lands established by Executive order.

The acts of May 27, 1902 (32 Stat. L. 263), and June 15, 1880 (21 Stat. L. 199), regarding Executive-order reservations in Utah and Colorado.

Congress by the act of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L. 377), appropriated $1,500,000 to pay the Colville Indians for land included within their reservation by Executive order, which land had been thrown open to settlement under the act of July 1, 1892 (27 Stat. L. 62). By the act of March 22, 1906 (34 Stat. L. 80), surplus land on the diminished Colville Indian Reservation was opened to settlement, "the net proceeds . . . from the sale and disposition of the land aforesaid, including the sums paid for mineral and town-site lands," to be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the Indians having tribal rights on the reservation and to be expended for their benefit.

The act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L. 458), authorized allotments in severalty to the Indians on the Spokane Reservation, which was established by Executive order of January 18, 1881, and authorized the disposal of the surplus lands at the appraised valuation thereof, the proceeds to be deposited to the credit of the Spokane Indians. The act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. 123-155), authorized and directed the Secretary of the Interior to lease for mining purposes unallotted land on the diminished Spokane Reservation, the proceeds to be paid into the Spokane Indian tribal fund.

When the appeal of Mr. Harrison was under consideration this office was given no opportunity to present its views, although property rights of the Indians were involved. It was first informed of the decision on June 16, 1922, when a copy of a letter to Mr. Gerald Hughes, of Denver, Colo., advising him of the decision, was sent here for the information of the office.

The subject matter involved is one of great importance to the Indians occupying Executive-order reservations. Under the general leasing act of February 25, 1920, none of the proceeds arising from the leasing of the land will be available for the benefit of the Indians who are entitled thereto. It is true that recommendation was made to Congress that the act be amended so that the Indians would get one-third of the proceeds arising from the leasing of their lands, but such legislation was not enacted.

Both Congress and the Supreme Court of the United States have recognized that the Indians have a good title to the lands set apart for their use regardless of how such reservation was created. In view of the action of Congress in recognizing the right of the Indians to the proceeds of the sale of timber on Executive-order reservations, of the sale of surplus lands thereof, and when the land is leased under the act of June 30, 1919, the office is satisfied that if Congress had intended the act of February 25, 1920, to apply to Indian reservations provision would have been made for the use of all the money arising therefrom for the benefit of the Indians occupying the land. The office is convinced that if the lands are leased and the funds applied as provided in the act of February 25, 1920, the Indians will have a good and just claim against the United States therefor.

This subject is being brought to your attention with the request that it be referred to the Solicitor for the Interior Department for an opinion as to the Indian title to lands within Executive-order Indian reservations and also to the applicability of the general leasing act of February 25, 1920, to such lands. In this connection attention is invited to the brief filed by the Indian Rights Association regarding this matter.

Cordially yours,

CHAS. H. BURKE, Commissioner.

Referred to the solicitor, as suggested.

HUBERT WORK, Secretary.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOEL C. CLORE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3432) for the relief of Joel C. Clore.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEEDY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold it, if the gentleman wants to be heard. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM P. NISBETT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6227) for the relief of the estate of William P. Nisbett, sr., deceased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill seeks to pay $20,530.52 out of the United States Treasury under unanimous consent, and it is too big a bill, and I object.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Let me state to the gentleman from Texas and to the Members of the House why these bills come before Congress. There is a general law which covers burglary in the Post Office Department up to $10,000. If, as I explained the other day on the floor of the House, there happens to be an extra $10 or $50 bill in the till, then it has to come to Congress, because the law says it must come to Congress. There is no question about the burglary and there is no question about these stamps being stolen. Congress is the only place where this bookkeeping can be corrected. It is not a question of fault on the part of the postmaster and it is not a question whether we are doing justice to the postmaster. It is just a question of readjusting the accounts of the Post Office Department.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Nisbett, now dead, never was a constituent of mine; but I happen to have known him very well in his lifetime. He was a man of the very highest integrity, and a man who could not have been at all in fault as to the loss of this money. He was not even of my party, although that does not affect the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not consider those questions.

Mr. CRAMTON. And I want to emphasize the fact that that is not influencing me in my statement.

Mr. BLANTON. Big Rapids is a little town of 5,000 or 6,000 people. Does the gentleman want to encourage postmasters in small towns to keep large sums of money in the office?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. It is customary in the prominent post offices to keep a sufficient supply of postal stock on hand in order to supply the little offices that surround that particular post office. That was done there and it is being done in my home city.

Mr. CRAMTON. This was not cash, but it was in large part postal stock.

Mr. BLANTON. I know that. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEBY], who is the acting representative of the second assistant floor leader, speaks for 20 minutes in order to try to save $300 and then lets a big claim of $20,000 go through without objection, and this being the bill of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], who renders valuable services here all the time on the floor, I am not going to stand in its way.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 1360, a bill which is similar to the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 1360, which is similar to the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the legal representatives of the estate of William P. Nisbett, sr., deceased, formerly postmaster at Big Rapids, Mecosta County, Mich., in the sum of $20,530.52, due to the United States on account of postal stamps, war-savings stamps, and money order funds which were lost as the result of burglary on the night of November 19, 1922.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

JOEL C. CLORE

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 3432) for the relief of Joel C. Clore be passed over without prejudice and remain on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not necessary at the present time.

EDWARD J. O'ROURKE, GUARDIAN OF KATIE I. O'ROURKE

There was no objection.

O'Rourke, as guardian of Katie I. O'Rourke, in full settlement against the Government as reimbursement for funds sent through the mails at various times from September 25, 1920, to June 29, 1925, by Katie I. O'Rourke, of whom Edward J. O'Rourke is now guardian, said sums having been received in the dead letter office of the Post Office Department and subsequently deposited in the Treasury as part of the postal revenues.

JOHN DOYLE, ALIAS JOHN GEARY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3625) for the relief of John Doyle, alias John Geary.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are a number of these bills of a similar nature having to do with Civil War veterans who served their country well for a period of six months to several years. They were captured, in some instances, and were exchanged and failed to show up with their companies. In each case of that sort I do not see how anyone can object to the passage of such a bill, and I am, therefore, going to withdraw my objection and let the bill pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers of the Volunteer Army, John Doyle, alias John Geary, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company C, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, on the 10th day of January, 1863.

With the following committee amendment:

After line 9 insert:

"Provided, That no back pay, pension, or bounty shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

With the following committee amendment:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit to the account of B. G. Oosterbaan, postmaster at Muskegon, Mich., in the sum of $8,009.28, and certify said credit to the General Accounting Office, being the amount of the deficit existing at present in said postmaster's accounts due to the misappropriation of funds in said office, for which he was in no way responsible and without fault or negligence on his part.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, have I the privilege of striking out the last word?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the bill is for the purpose of compensating some postmaster in the sum of $8,000, and there was no objection to the consideration of the bill, and I would like to know upon what ground gentlemen who have these bills in charge and object to them what particular ground they would have in allowing a bill of this kind to go through and absolutely object to a bill I introduced, which was before the House for consideration, for the paying of an amount of money that was stolen from the Cincinnati post office. That bill was objected to and I was not even given permission or time to explain the merits of the bill. That bill was reported out by the Committee on Claims, in which it had an amendment that provided:

That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Joel C. Clore, former postmaster at Cincinnati, Ohio, in the sum of $8,783.57, due to the United States on account of the loss of postal funds, postage stamps, thrift stamps, and war-revenue stamps, resulting from burglary of said post office on June 16, 1921.

I would like to inquire whether it is necessary for some one who has a meritorious bill to go around beforehand and see the committee privately as to the bill, or whether it is the duty of the gentleman to have an opportunity to explain the merits of his bill here on the floor. I did not object to this bill. If I had known it was a post office bill, in all probability I should have objected to it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. If the gentleman will yield right there, the gentleman realizes that the Committee on Claims gave due consideration to his bill and reported it out favorably, and he should not take any revenge on the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am praising the Committee on Claims. I am not reflecting upon the Committee on Claims. I am questioning this committee of our House that is charged with the duty of going over bills in order to object. They would not give me an opportunity even to explain this bill. The Claims Committee has done well, has done its duty, and there is no reflection on that committee. They have reported out this bill, and I am just inquiring into the fact why a gentleman can not have an opportunity to explain the merits of a bill by the withholding of objection, and, as I say, our committee on objections do not even allow an opportunity to do that.

Mr. BEEDY. Does the gentleman really want an answer?

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly.

Mr. BEEDY. My answer to the gentleman is this. The gentleman, who I recognize is such an able and persuasive Representative on this floor, will recognize the bill is rather a dangerous bill, and I was afraid if I allowed him to have the floor to explain the bill that the House would pass the bill anyhow. The House demonstrated just a few minutes before it was not willing to accept an amendment made by me in perfect good faith, and the gentleman on this side has been given what is not a pleasant duty for me, and I am endeavoring to carry it out.

I am supposed to have charge of the Private Calendar. I want to take charge of it, and I am going to. There are some questions about the bill that I wanted to ask the gentleman to save time, and if he can answer them satisfactorily he will help in passing the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman does not even give me a chance to explain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

STATE BANK & TRUST CO., OF FAYETTEVILLE, TENN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4124) for the relief of the State Bank & Trust Co., of Fayetteville, Tenn.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the State Bank & Trust Co., of Fayetteville, Tenn., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,779.84, such sum being the amount of actual loss sustained by the bank by reason of the theft or loss of certain Liberty bonds while being transmitted as registered mail, caused by the neglect or disregard of postal laws and regulations on the part of postal officials or employees.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I think some brief statement should be made about the facts in this bill, inasmuch as it brings up a rather unusual question.

The bill is to reimburse a bank at Fayetteville, Tenn., for some bonds lost by registered mail. Under the general law, especially the law that prevailed at that time, only $50 could be recovered from the Post Office Department in cases of that kind. It would really be a very dangerous precedent to set for Congress to reimburse losses in registered mail except in one class of cases, and that is the kind covered by this bill, to wit, where the loss was the direct result of either the criminal act of a Government employee or the clearly negligent act of a Government employee.

Mr. ARENTZ. It is just for that reason that, in studying this bill, I failed to object to it, because there ought to be some way in which this registered package could have been receipted for.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I want it understood that there are those of us in the House who would object to reimbursement by private bill if registered matter were lost by burglary or by storm or by fire or by any of the other usual causes in cases of that kind. The Government is not the insurer except for the amount clearly provided by law. It is upon that amount that the small registration fee is based. If the Government is to be held the insurer for larger amounts than that which is provided by law, then larger registration fees must be charged. I am not sure we should enact any private bill at all for reimbursement in cases of lost registered mail. Certainly we should not do it except in cases where the loss is clearly due to the negligence or misconduct of a Government employee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHARLES B. BECK

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6003) for the relief of Charles B. Beck.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,729.94 to Charles B. Beck, postmaster at Richmond, Ind., said sum being the sum he voluntarily paid into the Treasury to make good the amount of public money appropriated by a postal clerk, Otto H. Sprong, to his own use, who was duly tried and convicted of said crime and punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF NOBLE-GILBERTSON CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6615) for the relief of Noble-Gilbertson Co., a corporation of Buford, N. Dak.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to issue patent to Noble-Gilbertson Co. for the east half of section 22, township 25 north, range 56 east, Montana principal meridian, upon payment by said corporation of the value of said land, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, less any amount loaned by said corporation to Christ Hepding and remaining unpaid: Provided, That in no event shall patent so issue to said corporation for said land except upon the payment therefor by said corporation at the rate of not less than $1.25 per acre.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HARVEY DUNKIN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2311) for the relief of Harvey Dunkin.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in this case. The amount of the claim is small, but this is one case that seems to me has no real ground to stand upon.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think the gentleman will distinguish a difference between the legality in a court of law and in the Committee on Claims, which is practically a court or committee of equity.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Of course, this man has no claim. That is conceded. But under the law of equity, through no fault of the man himself, through a fire, he lost his property. Now, as a court of equity—

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Let me say this to the gentleman: Here is one rule that I think we should follow whenever we compensate when losses result from the negligence of some employee of the Government.

In other words, the loss sustained should be the approximate result of the negligence of a Government employee. Now, let us look at the facts in this case. Here is what the Secretary of Agriculture says:

The record in this case discloses that the forest fire which caused the damage was purely the result of unavoidable conditions. The forest ranger was cleaning up some brush and other inflammable material around his administrative headquarters. Before starting the fire he had cleared a fire break to avoid its possible spread to other lands. Moreover, on the day the brush was burned a light rain was falling which continued throughout the day. Before he left the fire to get his lunch he took the precaution of piling and burning the knots and snags in a cleared space about 100 feet inside of the fire line, which is considered ample in the circumstances.

Now, let me read further:

His claim for compensation under the act of December 29, 1922, was disallowed, due to the fact that there was no negligence on the part of the forest officer.

Now, let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact: The Department of Agriculture had the authority and now has the authority under the law to settle this claim if it were due to negligence on the part of a Government employee, but the department declines to settle it. It says:

Our forester was not negligent; he used all the precautions that any man could be expected to use, and we will not settle it; but we recommend that it be passed up to Congress to settle.

Now, if you settle this claim you adopt the precedent that the Government is an absolute insurer for any damages of this kind, because this clearly shows that this was due to an act of God. Will the gentleman contend that the Government out there on those forests has not the right to clean up the debris?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. God did not set this fire?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Oh, no.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The fire was set by a forest ranger. In the estimation or judgment of the department the forest ranger took all the precautions that were necessary to prevent a spread of the fire, but in spite of the precautions the forest ranger took the fire spread and the fire burned this man's property. He did not set the fire; he had no way of stopping the fire when it was once started, and he did not even know that the fire had been set. Therefore, to do justice in this case I think the Government should pay.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will make this statement: If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] or the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] can point to one line in the testimony that shows that this Government employee was negligent and that through his negligence Mr. Dunkin suffered this injury, I will withdraw my objection and withdraw it now.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HAWLEY. This situation arose, as the gentleman has stated, by a forest officer burning some property on a rainy, windy day.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. No; the record shows that he started the fire when there was no wind and when it was raining, but the next day there came up a 60-mile gale.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have lived in that country all of my life; and if there ever was a rain like this without wind, it would be a most unusual phenomenon. But outside of that, here was this man living on his property by the side of the Government's property; this forest ranger started the fire; he went away and left it; the fire got away while he was gone and had left the fire, a thing which is condemned out there by all forest rangers—by the State of Oregon forest rangers and by Government forest rangers. On all signs which carry the regulations you find these words:

Do not leave your fire burning; do not leave a burning fire.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. We have to settle these claims on the evidence furnished, and the evidence is that there was no negligence on the part of this Government employee. I further submit that if there were negligence the department has the authority to settle the claim itself under the general law.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield further before he objects?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. The law has provided a rule by which claims may be settled, but we do not clothe the department with unlimited discretion. We say "in certain cases." That means that Congress has reserved to itself the right to determine such questions for itself. If a case occurs outside of those to be settled under the law, where there is a just claim on the part of the claimant for relief at the hands of the Government for something he has suffered and which arose out of some act on the part of the Government, we reserve to ourselves the right to settle such a claim on the ground of equity.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If you settle this kind of a claim, you make the Government an absolute insurer against any loss that may occur in this manner. Mr. Speaker, I object.

P. H. DONLON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5063) for the relief of P. H. Donlon.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200.34, to compensate P. H. Donlon, of Ruthven, Iowa, for actual financial loss sustained by him, without negligence on his part, through refund already made to the Post Office Department, wherein postal funds for which he was responsible as postmaster of Emmetsburg, Iowa, were on deposit in the Emmetsburg National Bank, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, where said bank failed under date of March 2, 1921, and was liquidated, none of said sum being repaid from the assets of said bank.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] something about this bill. In reading over the report it seems that the second dividend declared by the receiver in this case, instead of being applied to the reduction of the claim, was applied to the reduction of this postmaster's indebtedness at the bank. Now, why should the Government make any reimbursement in that case to the extent of $51.04, the amount of the second dividend?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I think that has already been given credit for.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. There is nothing to show that in the hearings. At least I have not been able to find it.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. It was my understanding that he added to his dividends the amount he had been given credit for on the bank indebtedness.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I of course would have no objection to this man being reimbursed for his real loss, and I thought the gentleman could give us the information. Undoubtedly, if he is getting reimbursement for a dividend that was applied to the liquidation of his own indebtedness, he ought not to have it.

Mr. ARENTZ. In the affidavit of P. H. Donlon, page 2 of the report, he speaks of certain deposits, including indorsed notes, and so forth, to cover post-office deposits, and the receiver of the bank eliminated certain of these notes so that it was impossible for him to send on to the Government depository elsewhere the proper amount, and this was $51.04, if I remember correctly, less than the full amount, and the postmaster is asking that this amount be credited to his account so that the matter will be balanced.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Two hundred dollars.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. No; that $50 merely offset the $51 that he owed on the note of his sister that he had indorsed.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Is the gentleman sure that this $234 represents the actual loss, not including the $51.04 that was applied to the liquidation of his own indebtedness?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. That was my understanding, and I did not know there was any question about it at all. I had not heard it questioned until the gentleman suggested it here, but I have not the original proofs here with me.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am taking my facts from the following statement of the Comptroller of the Currency:

You are advised that Mr. Donlon had indorsed a note in the bank for his sister. This note was secured by a mortgage upon certain real estate owned by the sister. She has since died and the real estate was insufficient to secure the amount due the bank. In other words, the sister was insolvent, and in such circumstances Mr. Donlon, as indorser of the note, was liable for its payment. Therefore the receiver withheld check from Mr. Donlon in the sum of $51.04, which was the amount of the second dividend due him on his claim.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. The total dividend that the receiver paid on these bank funds was 60% per cent, and among these funds should have been $50.14 more, but the receiver turned that down because of the indorsement. That merely refers to this particular note of $50.14, but the full credit received from the dividends received from the receiver amounted to $310.08, and the total indebtedness to the Government was $200 in excess of this amount.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Well, if the gentleman has satisfied himself about it—

Mr. ARENTZ. I feel satisfied about it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If the gentleman is satisfied that by the enactment of this bill the Government will not be doing more than allowing credit for the actual loss sustained, I shall not object.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

J. M. HEDRICK

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6080) for the relief of J. M. Hedrick.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to J. M. Hedrick, former postmaster at Flourtown, Montgomery County, Pa., the sum of $45.21, erroneously collected.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 7, strike out the figures "$45.21" and insert in lieu thereof "$41.31."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

J. B. ELLIOTT

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $470.61, to J. B. Elliott, postmaster at Athens, Tenn., being the amount paid out by him as the result of services rendered by an expert in burning open the doors of a safe in the post office at Athens, Tenn., which refused to function on July 10, 1922.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WALTER W. PRICE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8176) for the relief of Walter W. Price.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I am informed that there is a similar Senate bill on the Speaker's table, and without objection the Senate bill will be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, to credit the accounts of Walter W. Price, late postmaster at Onelda, Tenn., in the sum of $10,233.27, on account of the loss of postal funds and war-saving stamps resulting from the burglary of the First National Bank Building on May 16, 1920.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ENRIQUETA KOCH V DE JEANNERET

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8896), for the relief of Enriqueta Koch v de Jeanneret.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Enriqueta Koch v de Jeanneret, of Valparaiso, Chile, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 as complete indemnity for injuries to Lucia de Jeanneret, her daughter, occasioned by an assault at Valparaiso by Andrew Stanley Kondak, seaman, United States Navy, on February 4, 1921, and as reimbursement of all expenses caused thereby.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6 strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JAMES GAYNOR

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2184) for the relief of James Gaynor.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BEEDY. Reserving the right to object, I notice on page 7 of the report there is a power of attorney running to Joseph B. Perskie to settle this claim for the Government. I wondered if there was not an agreement for fees. It is suggested that we might be dealing with an ambulance case.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I would like to say to the gentleman from Maine, or any other Member of the House, that attorneys' fees, not to exceed a certain percentage, has been usually attached to bills. The committee had previously adopted that policy, but due to general objection on the part of the Members of the House has not included it in later bills. This man was obliged to do business for the Government through an attorney, and consequently the attorney is entitled to something, but I leave it to others to say how much it will be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James Gaynor the sum of $5,000 for bodily injuries sustained by him on May 24, 1925, on which date he was struck by an automobile, the said automobile being a Post Office Department mail truck driven by one Sylvester Thomas, who was then and there in the employ of the Atlantic City post office, said injuries necessitating the amputation of the left foot above the ankle.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 5 after the word "appropriated," insert the following: "and in full settlement against the Government." In line 6 strike out the figures "$5,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$3,598."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "ankle" insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount of any item appropriated in this bill in excess of 15 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim: Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum which in the aggregate exceeds 15 per cent of the amount of any item appropriated in this bill on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RUPHINA M. ARMENTROUT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5341) for the relief of Ruphina M. Armentrout.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ruphina M. Armentrout the sum of $10,000, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States on account of her husband, W. G. Armentrout, having been accidentally shot and killed while performing his duties as section foreman on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, by a soldier who at the time of the accidental shooting was in the service of the United States guarding the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad property in Virginia.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6 strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

H. H. HINTON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7809) for the relief of H. H. Hinton.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment instead of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of H. H. Hinton, postmaster at Lumberton, Miss., in the sum of $16,609.36, due the United States on account of postage stamps, war-savings certificate stamps, and war-tax revenue stamps, which were lost as the result of burglary on May 24, 1920.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HENRY T. HILL

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7134) for the relief of Henry T. Hill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] or some one who has this bill in charge, relative to the circumstances as to why Mr. Hill was convicted of being asleep at his post during time of war. It does not say anything in the report that accompanies the bill. Unless Mr. JAMES is here, I will ask that it be passed over.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, on page 2 of the report it shows that a hearing was had by the Military Affairs Committee of the House, and it is stated that the proof shows that he had been wrongfully convicted.

Mr. ARENTZ. It does not show how he was wrongfully convicted on page 2 of the report.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The Military Affairs Committee held a hearing, and their decision was as follows:

The committee that has had this case under investigation feels that a great injustice has been done Private Hill; that Congress ought to immediately grant him the relief asked; and we respectfully submit that this bill should pass Congress at the very earliest possible date, because this is the most outrageous and inexcusable verdict that has ever come to the notice of the membership of this committee. It assails every honest instinct of all who read this record. It is entirely out of harmony with truth and right. This verdict brings disgrace and disrepute upon the military system of our country. This verdict ought not to stand longer as a glaring wrong done an innocent private soldier and citizen of the United States.

Mr. ARENTZ. I have read that. What were the circumstances?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The circumstances were that he was railroaded; he was not guilty.

Mr. ARENTZ. Does the report clearly show that?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Absolutely.

Mr. ARENTZ. I withdraw my objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Henry T. Hill, late of Company D, Sixteenth United States Infantry, the sum of $961, in full compensation for 35 months' back pay, 2 months' extra pay, 3 years' clothing allowance, mileage or travel pay as per special act of Congress, 1901, and reimbursement for transportation and subsistence money expended for travel from San Francisco, Calif., to Detroit, Mich., said amounts accrued to the above, Pvt. Henry T. Hill, for services rendered in the military service of the United States in the Philippine Islands during the late insurrection, 1899-1900.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MRS. G. A. GUENTHER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7943) for the relief of Mrs. G. A. Guenther, mother of the late Gordon Guenther, ensign, United States Naval Air Corps.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the case of reimbursement of a mother for the loss of her son, who was an enlisted man in the United States Naval Air Corps. Now, of course, the ordinary rule is to compensate the dependent parent by a monthly compensation, and in reading the report on this same bill, made at a former Congress, I see she had been unable to obtain compensation from the Veterans' Bureau or from the Pension Department.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. First, in reference to the Veterans' Bureau, under the terms of the act it did not seem to apply to this kind of cases.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I just wanted to see. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill if she is not being compensated as in other similar cases.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. No. First, we tried to get relief through the Veterans' Bureau, and then it was referred to the Pension Office; and this seemed to come within a group of cases that did not come in the general scope, that did not happen to be included.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. There has been no ruling since the report, nor is she receiving compensation under the general law?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. No.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I have no objection to the bill, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. G. A. Guenther, Jefferson City, Mo., mother of the late Gordon Guenther, ensign United States Naval Air Corps, the sum of $10,000, on account of the death of her said son, who was killed in line of duty on April 23, 1923, when the plane, Aero M, in which he was riding, crashed into the sea.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 8, strike out $10,000 and insert $5,000.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN OFFICERS, ETC., OF THE UNITED STATES

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3436) for the relief of certain officers and former officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I ask that this go over without prejudice, as it involves a large number of claims.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas this bill was sent by the department to the Speaker of the House and reported by the chairman of my committee. We went over it very carefully. Many of these officers have been delayed in getting money charged against their account. The War Department is anxious to have it passed to clear their books as officers are calling up every week to see if they are going to get this relief. Officers are calling up every week to see if they are to get relief. Unless there is some specific feature of the case that the gentleman would like to have explained, I wish he would let it go through.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. It involves a large number of claims. To be perfectly frank, I did not know that we were to have claims before us to-day. I thought they were to be taken up to-morrow. I have not had the time yet to read the report on this bill.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If the gentleman wants time to consider it, we can have it passed over without prejudice. Mr. Speaker, I make the request that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ULRIC O. THYNNE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3446) for the relief of Ulric O. Thynne.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object, for the same reason as in the case of the other bill. I have not had time to read the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LESLIE WARNICK BRENNAN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2237) for the relief of Leslie Warnick Brennan.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I make the same objection. It is the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVENPORT]. I did not know that to-day would be claims day. This bill involves $16,000. I have not had time to read the report. For that reason only I object at this time.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Is the gentleman going to object to all the claims from my committee because he has not had time to read the reports?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. To any bills involving that much money and with reports of that length I am going to object.

Mr. DAVENPORT. It is a very simple and just bill. I think I can make it clear to the gentleman in a very few minutes if there is any question he wishes to ask.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The report on this bill covers 14 pages and involves an expense of $16,000. It may be entirely meritorious, but—

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The bill grows out of an action for which the Government has already paid property damages. No; I am in error about that. That applies to another bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas reserve the right to object?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman and Members of the House that this bill involves a case of long-standing injustice. In the year 1917, after the outbreak of the war, Mr. Brennan, who hails from Utica, N. Y., conceived the idea of developing motion pictures at West Point for the purpose of training the millions of men in the Army at that time in training camps. The Army collaborated with him constantly all through the process. The War Department passed on the films. They were taken over by the Government in the training camps. This claimant never saw the films again and he has never been reimbursed in the slightest degree for the expenses he incurred.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The claim may be meritorious, and it is not my purpose at this time to dispute the merits of the claim, but simply because it involves a large sum of money and a report of 13 or 14 pages I ask unanimous consent that it go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle the following claims for damages to and loss of private property, for personal injuries, and refund of money arising incident to the operation of the Army, namely:

To August Thiele, Brilon, Germany, $100; to Lina Rupp, Neckarwimmersbach, Germany, $200; to Leopold Walford (London) (Ltd.), 29 Great St. Helens, London, England, $1,840.75, or so much thereof as might be required to purchase exchange, not to exceed the amount of £378.5.0; to Louis Bringer, 154 Boulevard Malesherbes, Paris, France, $325, or so much thereof as might be required to purchase exchange, not to exceed the amount of 6,500 French francs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CURTIS L. STAFFORD

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1481) to authorize the President to appoint Capt. Curtis L. Stafford a captain of Cavalry in the Regular Army.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I would like to ask the gentleman who has this bill in charge what is its nature?

Mr. ARENTZ. An officer of the Regular Army has a certain number on the list. It happened that this man was born in February of a certain year, and he was placed on the rolls as having been born in July. Advances would have occurred in February and July, and instead of being advanced as he would have been if his name had been set down correctly as having been born in February, he was put back several numbers. This bill, which is similar to a number of others, does nothing more nor less than give the man the justice that he is entitled to.

Mr. STEPHENS. The bill provides that the President is authorized to appoint Captain Stafford a captain of cavalry in the Regular Army?

Mr. ARENTZ. Yes. The report shows that—

Captain Stafford was born February 8, 1894, as shown by the Army Register and his 201 file, but the board which formed the promotion list erroneously assumed that he was born July 8, 1894. His name appeared among the first lieutenants on the promotion list number 5773 in Army Register, 1923. If he had been properly placed on the list according to age, he should follow immediately after Capt. Orlen N. Thompson, No. 5741, Army Register, 1923, with rank as captain from July 1, 1920, and would not have been demoted from captain to first lieutenant under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1922, as amended by the act of September 14, 1922.

This is merely to advance him in the line that he was really entitled to.

Mr. STEPHENS. Does the gentleman's colleague agree to this?

Mr. ARENTZ. He does not know a thing about this bill. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I was asked to take over one-half of this Private Calendar. I will try to study every bill as conscientiously as possible, and I shall not object to any bill which I think has merit. I will not object to any where there is a question in my mind and where the committee has given it attention. As I say, I am handling every other bill on this calendar, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] is handling those I am not handling.

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman will give a Member an opportunity to explain the merits of his bill, will he not?

Mr. ARENTZ. Well, I am sure the gentleman from Maine is fair in every instance. He may not have understood the case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Curtis L. MADISON DEBATES OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION, ETC.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged concurrent resolution from the Committee on Printing and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Declaration of Independence of the 13 United States of America was proclaimed on the 4th day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-six, whereby the United States assumed "the separate and equal station among the powers of the earth to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them"; and

Whereas the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence is to be celebrated in 1926 throughout the length and breadth of this "indestructible Union of indestructible States," now happily 48 in number; and

Whereas through the government of the Federal Union established on the 4th day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, under the Constitution of the United States the principles of the Declaration of Independence were rendered effective and representative government made its formal entry into the world; and

Whereas the movement for a revision of the Articles of Confederation so as to "render the Federal Constitution adequate to the ex-gencies of the Government and the preservation of the Union," was conducted by James Madison, of Virginia, later a delegate to the Federal Convention and fourth President of the United States, to whom there is no public monument at the seat of government of the Nation, and by Alexander Hamilton, of New York, later a delegate to the Federal Convention and first Secretary of the Treasury under the Constitution, in commemoration of whose services a bronze statue, erected by the private munificence of an anonymous donor, was recently placed on the steps of the National Treasury; and

Whereas the safety of republican institutions admittedly and proverbially depends upon the frequent recurrence to first principles; and

Whereas the representative government of the States of the American Union organized under the Federal Constitution is threatened without and its principles are inadequately known and appreciated within the United States by multitudes of our fellow citizens enjoying its inestimable benefits; and

Whereas an authentic and accurate account was kept by James Madison of the proceedings in the Federal Convention in which the Constitution was framed, the texts of the debates and proceedings of which could be published in one small volume and ought to be widely distributed as a public document, together with the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, the Constitution, the instructions to the Delegates to the Federal Convention, the instruments of ratification of the States, and the texts of the amendments to the Constitution: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be compiled, printed with illustrations, and bound as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing 10,000 copies of the Madison Debates of the Federal Convention, together with the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, the Constitution, the instructions to the Delegates to the Federal Convention, the instruments of ratification of the States, and the texts of the amendments to the Constitution, and other relevant and pertinent historical documents for distribution in the year 1926 in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence of the United States of America, to the end "that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth," of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 7,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MRS W. H. REMINE

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. W. H. ReMine, widow of First Lieut. W. H. ReMine, Medical Corps, United States Army, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,156.89 for the loss of her furniture, household goods, and personal effects caused by shipment on United States transport Madawaska.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GERALDINE KESTER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5441) for the relief of Geraldine Kester.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, this bill ought to pass, but it ought to be reduced.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. According to the surgeon who handled this case, it is entirely meritorious.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to tell the gentleman this: The Committee on Claims years ago adopted a policy to pay not more than $5,000 for the death of a person. They would pay from $2,500 up to $3,500 for the loss of a limb. I will admit that this is a serious accident, the loss of one leg.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. And particularly to a girl.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Your committee has taken this matter up with the compensation board. There is some change of policy in the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. What is it?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The change is due to the advice of counsel of the compensation board.

Mr. BLANTON. A moment ago, with respect to the Galveston case, where the gentleman from Massachusetts called attention of the gentleman from Maine, who was on watch at that time, to the fact that if he could have seen that tremendous wound in the back of the claimant, he would not have contended for 20 minutes for a reduction of $300.

He would have realized the man was more severely injured than he thought, and that he was entitled to the recompense.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Let me read this to the gentleman:

The sum of $5,000, which it is proposed to award by H. R. 5441, is not excessive for such a permanent disability, whether the test be the amount which would be awarded for the loss of a leg under the Federal compensation act or the amounts usually recovered in successful personal-injury suits.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the gentleman's policy, to adopt a rule whereby in all cases where a female has lost one leg you will pay $5,000. Is that the policy?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The policy of the committee thus far has been to report $5,000 for the loss of a leg or arm.

Mr. BLANTON. And $5,000 for the loss of life, and you put the loss of one limb—an arm or leg—on the same basis as the loss of life?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I do not know how the gentleman feels, but I think I would rather give up my life than to go maimed through life from the loss of a leg or arm.

Mr. BLANTON. I would give up both legs if it were necessary to save my life.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman looks at it in a different sort of way from myself.

Mr. BLANTON. I would do it right now.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The greatest horror I have in my mind is that I should be subject to an injury which would deprive me of a leg or arm, and I would rather die and have it all over with.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of the happiest people I have known in life have been men and women who have lost limbs, and yet have gone through life happy, industrious, and made valuable citizens of our country.

Mr. BEEDY. What kind of a limb does the gentleman refer to; the tongue is a limb?

Mr. BLANTON. I know a former county judge in Dallas County, Tex., who had both arms off and one leg off, who held the position of county judge, and was happy and successful.

Mr. UNDERHILL. He is a wonder. If the gentleman will take the responsibility and will offer an amendment for such a sum as he thinks a leg or arm may be worth, the gentleman from Massachusetts will not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I think $3,500 ought to be the maximum for the loss of one limb. If the gentleman does not care to adopt a policy to apply to all cases—

Mr. UNDERHILL. We have adopted a policy of $5,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I was on the Claims Committee about four years and I helped to handle hundreds of claims and the policy of the committee was never to pay over $3,500 for the loss of a limb.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We had a case only some weeks ago where a young man lost three fingers, and they gave him, I think, $4,200.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about Congress adopting a policy for all of those cases.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Is it not a fact there has been a liberalization all over the country in the handling of such claims, and is it not also a fact in this particular case it is not only the fact she has lost the use of a limb, but she comes from a very poor family and not likely to receive the kind of training which would fit her—

Mr. BLANTON. If the distinguished professor from the university will yield to me I will state to him that whenever you pass this bill you will have a precedent hereafter that whenever they lose a leg you will have to give them $5,000.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I do not think you will see a similar—
Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. There is no precedent like this.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; this will be a new precedent.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Offer the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will agree to reduce it to $3,500—

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. With reference to the question of precedent, I will say the House allowed in the case of the Houston rioters a young man who lost an arm at the shoulder $5,000.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is the case, it is a precedent, and I withdraw any objection. [Applause.]

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object while I ask a single question.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. I can always depend upon my friend.

Mr. BEEDY. Was there an attorney in this case?

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. There was no attorney whatever.

Mr. BOX. I will say in answer to the gentleman I believe a Member of the House gave his services in this case.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Geraldine Kester the sum of $5,000 for damages suffered by her by reason of being struck and seriously injured by a Government mail truck.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "appropriated," strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 6 and 7 and insert "In full settlement against the Government, to the legal guardian of Geraldine Kester, the sum of $5,000 in compensation for injuries caused by a post-office truck, resulting in the amputation of her left leg."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, in connection with this claim I want to present to the House more fully than has yet been presented the situation in connection with this and other similar claims. I simply want you to understand it.

I do not object to this claim. I feel that $5,000 is not too much for this girl who lost a leg. There are other cases like it, one reported this morning on this calendar, where a limb was lost and $5,000 was recommended by the committee.

I do not believe that is consistent with the policy which limits death claims to $5,000. There are cases in which nothing can be properly awarded in a death claim. But there are many cases in which the loss caused by death of a member of the family is very much larger than this, and I believe that the House ought to fairly face the proposition now, since it has concluded to award $5,000 for the loss of an arm or a leg. The death compensation should not always be limited to $5,000.

I simply want you to understand what you are doing. While there may have been exceptions, I think this is a departure in the policy, and I want my colleagues to know that I think so.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Beier, who was a private in One hundred and forty-second Ambulance Company, One hundred and eleventh Sanitary Train, Thirty-sixth Division, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from military service of the United States as a private of said company: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

SALE OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS IN KANSAS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7276) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to dispose by sale of certain public land in the State of Kansas.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], who introduced this bill, on the floor? I do not see him at the present moment, and I object until I can further study the bill.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. This bill was given very careful consideration by the Committee on the Public Lands. They heard the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] and thought it was justified, and the Secretary of the Interior has recommended its passage.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Is the gentleman from Nevada a member of that committee?

Mr. ARENTZ. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. In reading over this report hurriedly, it seems that the Government brought a suit in the district court in Kansas and the defendant in the case offered no evidence at all, and while the lower court gave a judgment in favor of the defendant, on appeal the land was awarded to the Government. What is the value of this land?

Mr. ARENTZ. The value at that time was $1.25 an acre.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I know that is the value at time of original homesteading; that is what the bill authorizes to be paid. Has the gentleman any evidence as to what the value of this land was?

Mr. ARENTZ. Not at the present time. This is homestead land.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Does the gentleman know if this is in the oil fields in Kansas?

Mr. ARENTZ. No. That matter was not mentioned. It is described as homestead land. The Secretary of the Interior has been very watchful about possible oil lands. He has withdrawn for the Government all possible oil land in that section that it is possible to withdraw.

The entry was subject to the holding of title by the Government of all oil and mineral rights, similar to other homestead entries. The Government has the right to oil and minerals.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Does the bill read that way?

Mr. ARENTZ. If it does not, it should read that way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object at this time.

LEGAL EXPENSES INCURRED BY THE SAC AND FOX TRIBE OF INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9161) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay legal expenses incurred by the Sac and Fox Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman in charge of the bill give me some information? What services did these attorneys actually render? There is nothing in the record to show they secured a cancellation.

Mr. SWANK. Yes; they brought a suit to cancel this oil lease.

Mr. BEEDY. And they secured a cancellation?

Mr. SWANK. That is what I understand; yes.

Mr. BEEDY. Does the gentleman know?

Mr. SWANK. No; I will not state that to be a fact, because I do not know.

Mr. BEEDY. All the gentleman knows is that a suit was entered?

Mr. SWANK. Yes. The Secretary of the Interior says they rendered valuable services and these Indians have asked that these claims be paid out of their funds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3538 be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that an identical Senate bill be substituted for the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the funds in the Treasury belonging to the Sac and Fox Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma, to Embury, Johnson & Tolbert, of Oklahoma City, Okla., and to Charles J. Kappler, of Washington, D. C., for expenses and legal services rendered said tribe in the matter of the cancellation of the Patrick oil and gas lease on tribal school lands, the sum of $351.15, said sum having been set apart by the tribe for such payment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman who introduced the bill say whether this is a bill for the issuance of a patent for an invention or a patent for real estate?

Mr. LETTS. No; it is a patent for land.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then the title ought to be amended providing for the issuance of a patent for certain land, because from a reading of the title that is not shown. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent to John H. Bolton, of Cowley County, Kans., the following described property, to wit: The south-east quarter of the northwest quarter of section 3, township 33 south of range 6 east, upon payment thereof at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

KATHERINE RORISON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2333) for the relief of Katherine Rorison.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. BEEDY. I withhold it to ask the gentleman this question: I see they charged $800 and over for the embalming of this body. Was there any attempt to look into that to see who the author of that robbery was?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes. There is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury and accompanying documents which show that these services could not have been secured for a less outlay than that.

Mr. BEEDY. I see that this friend, Mr. Clarke, I think it was, assumed the burden of paying all these expenses. Did he himself actually pay that amount of money for the embalming?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. He did not assume the burden of paying for everything, but somebody connected with this lady, the widow of the dead man, paid the full amount. The amount that was paid was—and I am stating the figures approximately—$800 for this embalming, about $200 for the casket and then incidental expenses.

Mr. BEEDY. I am not going to object to it, but I think it was highway robbery and nothing else.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I agree with the gentleman that the charge was a very heavy one, but the proof is that they could not have gotten the work done for a less amount.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas W. J. S. Stewart, as acting assistant surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, was stationed at the American consulate, La Guaira, Venezuela, by order of the United States Public Health Service at the time of his death and was discharging his official duties at that time; and

Whereas great expense was incurred in connection with the transportation of the remains to New York for interment at home; and

Whereas in the case of diplomatic and consular assistants Congress has provided for appropriations to defray the expenses of transporting the remains of those who have died or may die abroad or in transit while in the discharge of their official duties to their former homes in this country for interment, but has made no provision for representatives or assistants of the United States Public Health Service; Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the widow of W. J. S. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes; I reserve it.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed at the last session. It has been gone into very carefully by the department. It is a reimbursement for some stamps that were stolen a number of years ago. At one time it seemed the department had the idea the postmaster was guilty of negligence. That matter was further investigated and after investigating the matter very carefully the inspector who went out and made the investigation found there was no negligence on the part of the postmaster, that the stamps had actually been stolen, and he recommended that the Government reimburse the postmaster.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Is the report of that inspector in the hearings or in the report?

Mr. ARNOLD. It is.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The gentleman need not refer to it, and if the gentleman can assure me the inspector has made an inspection and has found that this loss was not due to the fault of the postmaster and that he was not negligent in respect of the loss, it will be all right with me.

Mr. ARNOLD. Quoting from May 7 of the report, the inspector says:

I submit Postmaster Bingham's affidavit, and am satisfied that he sustained the loss as claimed. I therefore have to recommend that he be indemnified in the sum of $500.

The Postmaster General also recommended the reimbursement of the postmaster.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL and Mr. KELLER rose.

Mr. UNDERHILL. What does the gentleman want to know about it?

Mr. BEEDY. This shortage occurred through fraudulent practices by the postmaster, practices which would not have been possible without the connivance of McMahan. It is recommended in the report or something is said about prosecuting McMahan. They thought he should have been punished with the principal, but I can not see that he was, nor do I find they even attempted to proceed against the bondsmen of McMahan, and I think it would be fairer to the Government to proceed against the bondsmen of McMahan to make up this balance than it would to come in here and ask it of the Government. What is the bond of a man in the position of McMahan worth if it is not to protect the Government in just such cases as this?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, there is no question but what the Government is going to continue to prosecute and try to get this money from the bondsmen, but the postmaster had nothing to do with the act of this employee. He is not postmaster now, and there is no reason why he should be held liable for the $2,000 or more that it appears was stolen from the Government. The Government is going to continue, of course, to try to get back this money from the bondsmen.

Mr. BEEDY. McMahan admitted his participation and said he knew he was doing wrong, but he himself did not use any of the money. However, the fraud would not have been possible without McMahan's connivance, and I think McMahan is responsible.

Mr. KELLER. That is not the fault of the postmaster.

Mr. BEEDY. When the money is collected, if they are going to proceed against McMahan's bondsmen and make the Government whole, then it is fair to reimburse the postmaster, but I do not see why the Government should be made responsible here.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERHILL. This man had no say as to whom he should hire and had no power to fire. He had to take help which the Government secured for him.

Now he has not been concerned in this fraudulent case in any way. Under the laws of the Postal Department the postmaster is held responsible for property of the United States in the hands of those over whom he has no power to hire or fire. Why should he be charged with this?

Mr. GLYNN. Is it not a fact that each of these persons are required to give bond, not to the postmaster but to the Government?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. I withdraw my objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of A. S. Guffey, late postmaster at Pittsburgh, Pa., in the sum of $2,237.50 due to the United States on account of postal funds embezzled by Henry C. The conclusion reached by the Acting Secretary of State has my approval and I recommend that the Congress authorize an appropriation of $9,200 to be paid to Mr. Wiseman in recognition of the services which he so generously rendered.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 23, 1926.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed with accompanying documents.

ARCHIBALD L. MACNAIR

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 613) for the relief of Archibald L. Macnair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call attention that on page 2 of the report the Secretary of War makes the following statement concerning this claim:

The report of the board does not show negligence on the part of Lieutenant MacDermot or any other representative or employee of the Government, which approximately contributed to and caused the accident to Mr. Macnair's airplane. In fact, the finding was that the accident was unavoidable and not due to the fault and neglect of the pilot or any other person.

And yet if this bill is passed it would award $1,330.10 to the claimant.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. If the gentleman will note at the top of the page, third paragraph, the following:

That in taking off, the Army plane veered to the left and struck two automobiles with its left wing and wing hip. The Army plane was consequently thrown more to the left, which caused it to crash into the Sopwith 1A-2 airplane and the pilot was unable to prevent its collision with the Sopwith plane.

The pilot and his mechanic attributed the accident to the "jamming" of the rudder.

Now as usual in many of these cases the department does not wish to assume any blame for the accident but rather attribute it to an unavoidable cause. I do not know whether the jamming of the rudder was unavoidable or not, but the fact the rudder jammed showed that there was some negligence on the part of somebody. As the airplane was owned by the United States Government operated by duly authorized agents of the Government and the rudder jammed and injured another plane, it seems to me the equities in the case declare absolutely in favor of the claimant. Now we can not settle these cases on a technical point of law at all times but must necessarily look to the equities. Surely the owner of this plane did not jam the rudder. He was not in charge of the operation of the plane; he had nothing to do with it. An Army plane crashed into him and somebody was to blame.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I think in view of the circumstances which the gentleman has pointed out that it is a reasonable inference that there was negligence in this case. But let me further emphasize while on this point—I am going to withdraw my objection in view of what the gentleman has stated—but here is a rule I think ought to govern in these cases. We all know, of course, you can not sue the Government of the United States, and yet I think the Government ought to reimburse in all cases where the damage is shown to be the approximate result of the negligence of any employee of the Government. Now I think we ought to do that, but on the other hand we ought to be careful not to make the Government an insurer in all of these cases. Unless the evidence in the case is sufficient to show negligence on the part of Government employees there ought not to be compensation. Why should there be?

Now I think the facts the gentleman has just pointed out make it reasonable to infer that there was negligence notwithstanding the report of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. My colleague from Texas is very broad-minded, and I call his attention to the report of the Army officials who looked into this. They recommended that it be paid. There is no way to prove negligence. This is a meritorious claim and I trust the able gentleman, my friend and colleague, will not object.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I think it is reasonable to infer negligence, from the facts which are stated in the report. Else I would certainly object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague from Texas yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BOX. My understanding of the work of the committee and its view of these claims is that, generally speaking, it is in line with the idea which my colleague from Texas has expressed; that there must be some evidence of a wrong resulting in the injury committed or the injury done. In other words, where it is purely a case of accident, I do not think the Government should be held liable. I think the committee does not usually allow damages. Of course there is controversy sometimes about the application of these rules to a certain state of facts; but as one member of that committee, while I do not think there should be a strict adherence to a technical rule, I think if there is an injury approximately as the result of that wrong, in such cases there should be compensation.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Archibald L. Macnair, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,530.10 as damages for the destruction of his Sopwith airplane by an Army service airplane, March 12, 1922, at Daytona Beach, Fla.

Such sums represent the amount of damages, as determined by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, resulting from a break, during the winter of 1919-20, in Dam No. 3, Muskingum River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Who has charge of this bill?

Mr. COYLE. I have.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the use of continuing this foolishness?

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Speaker, I really do not quite understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, we have a law which prevents any officer of this Government from receiving gifts from foreign countries. To try to get around that law which prevents giving gifts of a monetary value they are now attempting to confer orders upon some of our American officers. An order could be considered a thing of value the same as a monetary gift. Why do you not just open the floodgates and say, "Foreign countries, you can give American officers whatever you please"?

Mr. COYLE. In answer to the gentleman's question the reason we do not do that is because it would require a constitutional amendment to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman is admitting that this is an attempt to get around the Constitution?

Mr. COYLE. No, it is not. It is seeking to comply with the Constitution, which says that an act of Congress may permit foreign nations to bestow decorations on members of the military forces of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. I think our Government can take care of our own officers and confer proper orders upon them, American orders; not Chilean orders but American orders.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. In the World War a great many of the allied nations gave certain decorations.

Mr. BLANTON. That was for bravery on the battle fields.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. And there was a special act of Congress for that.

Mr. BLANTON. We permitted the croix de guerre to be conferred for special acts of bravery and it was conferred by law.

Mr. UNDERHILL. We are now seeking by law to allow these officers to receive a token, something which they can hand down to their children.

Mr. BLANTON. I would rather have a token from our own American Government than from all the rest of them put together.

Mr. UNDERHILL. So would I, but if your duties lie in some foreign country, and you are sent there by your Government, and if other countries choose to recognize the services which you may have given, we should by law permit it.

Mr. BLANTON. If they are giving first-class, 100 per cent American service to their own country, it ought to be recompense and compensation enough for them.

Mr. UNDERHILL. But it is not always.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COYLE. May I ask the gentleman to reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve it if the gentleman wants to speak.

Mr. COYLE. This is a particularly meritorious case. It just happens that Captain Taussig is really a very distinguished officer of our own service who performed valiant service in European waters in submarines and destroyers during war time; that the men under his command were very active in humanitarian acts in Chile, and they saved the lives of a number of people in a disaster which overtook that country. The award of merit was at the time handed to them, but, complying with the existing law, they immediately handed it to the representative of our State Department, which the law requires them to do.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COYLE. Gladly.

Mr. BLANTON. Have they ever received any decorations from their own Government?

Mr. COYLE. For this particular act?

Mr. BLANTON. For any act.

Mr. COYLE. I am sorry to say I can not answer that, but I do not doubt that Captain Taussig has, because he has had a very distinguished service in Europe.

Mr. BLANTON. If I were in their places I would rather have it said when I die, "He gave his best to his own country." That is the kind of service I would like to see men give to the United States.

Mr. COYLE. For 32 years Captain Taussig has given his best to his own country and he was at this time acting under the orders of his own country.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet, it seems he has never been cited by his own country.

Mr. COYLE. I can not answer that question, because I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. I regret, Mr. Speaker, I must object.

Mr. COYLE. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not believe in this kind of legislation.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet Sunday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at noon on Sunday. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would it not be agreeable to the gentleman to have a session to-morrow and let us continue the consideration of the Private Calendar. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut there is a very considerable interest in doing that and I hope the gentleman will let the bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to be considered to-morrow.

Mr. TILSON. I will say to the gentleman there is one difficulty in the way. Some of the Members are endeavoring to study all of the bills on this calendar and we have about reached the point where these Members have not yet had an opportunity to study the bills. They would not be ready to go on to-morrow with the same fund of information and the same degree of helpfulness to the House as they would if they had a little more time to study them. We have done remarkably well to-day, and I can assure the gentleman that next week I shall ask that we may go on with these bills at either a day session or an evening session.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman feel that with a sentiment of doubt they would be more likely to offer objections?

Mr. TILSON. Oh, there would be more liability of objections that were not well founded. After the gentlemen who give so liberally of their time in the study of these bills have an opportunity to study them their objections are, as a rule, well founded.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the work to-day show that most of the bills that have been called up have been passed and that there have been very few objections?

Mr. TILSON. That is quite true.

Mr. BLANTON. And objections only when the bills were bad?

Mr. TILSON. I feel that studying these bills, as some Members of the House, of their own accord, are so helpfully doing, will save captious objections and will really facilitate the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. TUCKER. Will we have a day for this purpose next week?

Mr. TILSON. I shall make an effort to give a day or an evening next week to the consideration of these bills.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the gentleman that in so far as the sentiment seems to be among those on this side of the Chamber, those with whom I have had an opportunity to discuss the matter really desire to go on to-morrow, and I do not think captious objections would be made upon this side.

Mr. TILSON. There might be objections made, however, without full knowledge which might be gained by a study of the bills.

Mr. UNDERHILL. We have concluded five pages of work to-day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I realize that.

Mr. UNDERHILL. With one day next week and one day following that, we can clean up this calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I realize, of course, that good work has been done to-day. I have no personal interest in the calendar. I have not a bill on it. I am merely doing this at the suggestion, and I may say somewhat at the insistence, of a number of my colleagues on this side.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman will bear me witness that I have made every reasonable effort to advance the Private Calendar; and I intend to continue to do so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman has been entirely fair about the matter.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOX. I do not wish to insist on going forward if the majority leader thinks the House is not ready, but I do believe there are a great many claims here that are entitled to consideration.

Mr. TILSON. I do, too, and it is my intention to make every reasonable effort to see that they get their chance.

Mr. BOX. And I hope the gentleman will find it convenient to have a day session. When we work all day here, it is not very pleasant to have to work at night.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman is entirely correct, but if we can not reach the Private Calendar at a day session, I shall ask for an evening session to consider it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, my colleagues who have talked with me about this matter understand it would be useless for me to object to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut that we adjourn over until Sunday because this calendar would not be in order anyway, unless we could arrange it by unanimous consent.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman is entirely correct about that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Therefore I shall not object to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut to adjourn over until Sunday, but I do wish we could go ahead to-morrow with the Private Calendar.

Mr. TILSON. I really think that no time would be gained by going on to-morrow, but by the latter part of next week we should have an opportunity to study the bills on the calendar and to go on with its consideration.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I trust these vacations we are taking on Saturdays will not ultimately detract from the time we expect eventually to give to a discussion of agricultural legislation.

Mr. TILSON. I am very sure they will not.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the Ways and Means Committee gave a good deal of time and attention and ability and work to what is known as amendments to the adjusted compensation bill. I would like to know whether he expects to take up that legislation before adjournment.

Mr. TILSON. I have no immediate plan for taking up that legislation. It is being studied along with a number of other measures that take large sums of money out of the Treasury.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield I want to say that that bill seeks to cut off both arms and both legs of the Comptroller General. I hope the bill will sleep the sleep of death.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Can the gentleman give us any idea of the business that will come up after Monday. I understand that Monday is District Day.

Mr. TILSON. We are holding as much space as possible for agricultural legislation whenever it is ready. We do not wish to fill up the program too quickly. I shall let the gentleman know just as soon as it is definitely settled when that committee is ready to go ahead.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

THE CANAL ACROSS FLORIDA

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the Florida State Canal Commission by inserting a pamphlet of the commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Speaker and fellow Members of the House, in speaking of the bill introduced by myself early in the session, I would like to state, for your information, that this bill proposes a survey for the estimated construction of the canal across the State of Florida, from Fernandina, at Cumberland Sound on the Atlantic, to St. Georges Sound on the Gulf of Mexico. This is not a new undertaking, as you gentlemen probably know; it has been discussed for years and years, in fact from the time of George Washington to the present.

This proposed canal would be a little over 200 miles long and would follow the general course of the St. Marys River, which runs between Georgia and Florida, and a portion of which is entirely in the State of Georgia; then it would pass through Okefenokee Swamp; then down the Suwannee River in Florida to the mouth of the Suwannee River in the Gulf of Mexico, or rather across from the Suwannee River to St. Georges Sound, where the Gulf is deeper and where harbor facilities are better.

This canal will not call for a great amount of dredging—probably a hundred miles of it would have to be cut. Of course, these long waterways before mentioned would necessarily have to be straightened, widened, and dredged deeper in places.

It would not require a great deal of time or a comparatively large expenditure of money to accomplish this canal, as may be seen from the report of survey as made by Lieutenant Colonel Gilmore, who surveyed practically this course in 1876. I think the project could be completed within 12 to 18 months. I am not in a position to state what the cost of the barge canal would actually be. It has been estimated that it would cost from $16,500,000 to probably $45,000,000; different estimates at different times have varied. Even though the construction of a canal with a navigable depth of 12 feet, and though it cost as much as thirty or forty million dollars, in my opinion, would be a safe and wise investment for our Government. I am quite sure that this canal could be constructed at a far less cost.

This canal would bear an almost incalculable amount of commerce. Naval stores, kaolin, and a large amount of manufactured lumber would move through this canal. The tonnage of these products exported in 1921 exceeded 150,000 tons, valued at more than three and a quarter million dollars. These products and their exportation have doubtlessly doubled since 1921. Probably $2 per ton would be saved in transportation charges by this canal. Of course, I will not take time to enumerate the various other items of commerce which would pass through this canal, but I may state the items above mentioned would form only a meager part of the total.

When we take into consideration the great saving of coal and other fuels, and the transportation of same, and the transportation charges saved on the total, and also the ever-increasing volume of tonnage to be transported and the inability of the railroad facilities—although they are good—to rapidly, cheaply, and economically transport this tonnage, then it is conclusive that our waterways should be more fully developed.

This canal would save in distance from the Atlantic to the Gulf approximately 1,000 miles. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the saving the long distance is not all; in this same proportion it would save in time and in money. Calculate, if you please, the cost of transporting the vast tonnage which annually goes from the upper Gulf ports—New Orleans, Mobile, Pensacola, Apalachicola, Galveston, and others—to the Atlantic Ocean. Calculate the charge of transporting this tonnage 1,000 miles and you will find that in just a few years this amount will be greater than would be the cost of constructing this barge canal from Fernandina, on the Atlantic, to St. Georges Sound, on the Gulf.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it is time the Congress exercised in governmental affairs and expenditures of money belonging to the Government and our taxpayers the same prudence, wisdom, care, and frugality, as is exercised in personal affairs. It is inevitable that this barge canal will eventually be constructed, so why not let the Government go to it at once? We all know that the construction of the Panama Canal was looked upon by many for a long time as an impossibility and as a proposed waste of money and time; and probably nothing could have dislodged this erroneous idea, except the actual construction of the Panama Canal. But so complete has been the success of the project and so vast has been the saving in the cost and time of transportation through this canal until now the American people wonder why it was not earlier constructed. The Panama Canal is indispensable to the welfare of American and world commerce, besides being so essential in time of war; likewise, a canal across Florida would be of incalculable benefit and economy in commercial transportation and would well serve its purpose in time of war.

The growth of America in the past 20 years has been phenomenal, her manufactured products have increased from $15,000,000,000 to over $60,000,000,000, her food products have increased from less than $3,000,000,000 to over $10,000,000,000, her mineral products have increased from about one and one-third billion dollars to $6,000,000,000, her imports and exports amount to $2,450,000,000, and reports for 1924 show increase to $8,200,000,000. The bank clearings were $438,000,000 for 1924, or four times that of 20 years ago, and bank deposits have increased in like proportion, and $43,000,000,000 were deposited in the banks of the United States in 1924.

The vast wealth and resources of the United States altogether warrant an expansion in waterways development. The President of the United States has expressed himself in no uncertain terms on the question, and advocates development of our waterways, and I firmly believe the Congress is ready to appropriate money for opening of rivers, dredging of canals, and establishing of adequate harbor facilities.

The Florida Canal has long been a dream of all Florida citizens and is now thought of by our entire country. Its construction is absolutely essential to the future's full commercial development, and I believe we will soon see the time when barges will load raw products in the lower Mississippi, pass down to New Orleans, on by way of intercoastal canal to Mobile and Apalachicola, on across Florida to Fernandina, thence on up a coastal canal to the markets of the East, then reload with manufactured products of the East and make their return pilgrimage. When this is done, America will realize an even greater growth and prosperity than she has experienced during the past 20 years.

Our railroads are good and are being improved and developed more than in any other country, and America is proud of her splendid railway facilities, but her transportation and commerce will never reach the zenith until the Congress appropriates money sufficient to utilize America's water arteries of commerce. Money wisely spent to foster water transportation always nets a splendid dividend, and in my opinion there is no more worthy project now before the American people than that of the construction of a barge canal across the State of Florida.

This proposed canal, in accordance with the bill as introduced by myself, aside from its national and international importance, will open one of the most fertile, prosperous, and thriving sections of the country. Florida is spending billions of dollars in developing her schools, roads, and great industries. She is doing her part, and expects to continue to do it, but surely the Federal Government should now come in and do its part in this worthy project, and I believe that it is going to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I think it hardly necessary for me at this time to go into details and figures showing the exact amount in tonnage of commerce which follows down the course of the Mississippi and its tributaries to the Gulf, and also that which amasses itself down on the Gulf, which is transported across to the east coast of the United States, and also on to foreign markets, neither do I believe it essential just now to give you the figures upon that which passes from the east coast and from the European countries around to Galveston, New Orleans, and other Gulf ports. However, statistics reveal that this tonnage annually is very enormous, showing conclusively that the saving in transportation charges on this canal would in a very short time pay even the maximum amount estimated for its construction.

Inasmuch as I have been given permission to print in the Record a statement or pamphlet prepared by the authority of the Florida State Canal Commission, I shall not detain you further, but will here insert said statement:

HELP TO SECURE THE ALL-AMERICAN CANAL—THE ATLANTIC-MISSISSIPPI BARGE CANAL FROM CUMBERLAND SOUND, VIA ST. MARYS RIVER AND ST. GEORGES SOUND, TO THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT NEW ORLEANS—THE INDUSTRIAL CANAL AT NEW ORLEANS WILL BE THE WESTERN LINK OF THIS PROJECT—SUPPORT THE BILL (H. R. 8742) NOW IN CONGRESS INTRODUCED BY CONGRESSMAN R. A. GREEN, FLORIDA, TO CONNECT AND PERFECT THE INLAND WATERWAYS SYSTEM OF THE UNITED STATES

FROM PRESIDENT CALVIN COOLIDGE

Under date of November 13, 1925, President Calvin Coolidge said in his letter to President J. Hampton Moore, of the Atlantic Deep Waterways Association (which letter was read to the convention at Miami, Fla., in November, 1925):

"In the United States we have a natural scheme of waterways superior to that of any other country, which when improved and connected up to serve the remote as well as the populous areas will, it is said, justify, in reduced rates and increased commerce, the expenditure made upon them.

"The economic value of these streams has long been recognized, but their development has proceeded slowly. To render the highest service as carriers and distributors they should be joined together and standardized as to dimensions for traffic, so that the shipper would have confidence in them. When they are finally brought together in a workable system the benefits in rates and values will be incalculable.

"We have the streams, and ultimately they will be improved for service. They can develop both transportation and power. They will be completed for longer hauls and intersecting routes; they will be standardized so that all sections of the country would derive advantage from them.

"It is gratifying to note a growth of sentiment favoring the coordination of various means of transportation—the rail, the highway, and the waterway. Each of these has rendered a distinct service. They can render a greater service, more satisfying to the producer and to the consumer, as well as to the shipper, if made to assist rather than oppose each other."

FROM GOV. JOHN W. MARTIN

STATE OF FLORIDA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Tallahassee, March 3, 1926.

Hon. JOHN G. RUGE,

Chairman Florida State Canal Commission,
Apalachicola, Fla.

MY DEAR SIR: I approve of your plan to publish in pamphlet form a brief history to date of the movement to secure an inland waterway from Cumberland Sound to the Mississippi River via the St. Marys River, St. Georges Sound, and the natural waterways paralleling the Gulf of Mexico.

Due to the pressure of official business, I have not been able to give you much assistance, but I wish to assure the members of the commission that I am very much interested in having the survey authorized at the earliest date possible; and I hope that the people of Florida and other States will lend their support to this project, which is to mean so much to Florida and the United States in the future, since it will connect and perfect the inland waterway system of the country. The interchange of commerce between Florida and States of the Mississippi Valley will be mutually beneficial, and such a route would be used every day in the year for through traffic from point of origin to point of destination without transshipment; it would be economically practical for the Government to construct such a waterway to connect the Atlantic intra-coastal waterway at Cumberland Sound with the Gulf intra-coastal waterway at New Orleans and the Mississippi River and its tributaries, for commerce must in future depend more and more upon water transportation.

It is my ambition to aid Florida to complete its highway system during my term of office, and to enable me to more intelligently aid the State's development in all ways I have spent considerable time in visiting the various sections.

It is just as important, I think, for Florida to have a network of waterways that shall connect with the East Coast Canal and the Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal for both intrastate and interstate commerce. Florida can supply the Nation with a variety of commodities all the year, and should have access to the inland markets by cheaper transportation via barge service. I hope that the people of Florida will visualize this and work with us to this end. By the time the waterways are ready for through traffic Congress will have coordinated rail-and-water rates on a fair basis to all concerned, I have no doubt.

I am encouraged and congratulate you and the other members upon the progress made by the commission since it was created by the Florida Legislature to act as the State's agency to secure this great project. I know of no other project which will bring larger permanent benefits to Florida and to the United States.

With best wishes for continued success, I am,

Very truly yours,

JOHN W. MARTIN, Governor.

FROM GOV. CLIFFORD WALKER

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Atlanta, February 4, 1926.

Hon. JOHN G. RUGER,

Chairman Florida State Canal Commission, Tallahassee, Fla.

MY DEAR SIR: I am very much interested in the progress being made toward securing the preliminary examination and survey of the proposed Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal from Cumberland Sound via the St. Marys River and Okefenokee Swamp across northern Florida to St. Georges Sound and westward via the Government canal and the bays along the north Gulf coast to Mobile Bay and the Mississippi River.

This project will mean not only vast development for the territory adjacent to the route, but it being the connecting and very essential link between the Atlantic intracoastal waterway and the Gulf intracoastal waterway and Mississippi River, it will more than justify whatever the expense to the Government for its construction. It will be one of the Nation's greatest assets. The saving in mileage for barges will be most important.

The recent freight embargo and scarcity of coal in some sections by reason of lack of rail transportation facilities or cars all make the necessity for inland waterway transportation more apparent to promote industries and keep labor employed.

I wish to assure you and the members of your commission that the State of Georgia will cooperate in every way to insure the early accomplishment of this project, and I will be glad to assist personally in whatever way I can to promote this canal and inland waterway. Aside from the benefits to commerce, this canal is essential to the national defense.

Very truly yours,

CLIFFORD WALKER, Governor.

Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, in the House of Representatives, February 1, 1926, Mr. GREEN of Florida introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 8742) to require the Secretary of War to cause to be made a preliminary examination and survey for a barge canal from Cumberland Sound to or near the mouth of the Mississippi River, and to make full and complete report to Congress of the most feasible route and cost of construction.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, required and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made for a barge canal beginning in Cumberland Sound and terminating at or near the mouth of the Mississippi River, using the nearest, most practicable, and most feasible route which will permit the use of the waters of the St. Marys River of Georgia and Florida, the Suwannee River and St. Georges Sound of Florida, and all other rivers and bodies of water along and adjacent to such route, and provide a protected all-inland canal.

SEC. 2. That upon the making of such survey the Secretary of War shall report to Congress.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War shall ascertain the feasibility and practicability of such barge canal and in his said report to Congress give full detailed estimate of cost of such canal, a description of proposed route, dimensions of the proposed canal, amount of actual canalizing, and every fact and circumstance which in his judgment will be necessary to convey full information as to such proposed barge canal.

PROPOSED ALL-AMERICAN CANAL—THE ATLANTIC-MISSISSIPPI BARGE CANAL FROM CUMBERLAND SOUND, VIA ST. MARYS RIVER AND ST. GEORGES SOUND, TO THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT NEW ORLEANS, LA.

Appeal is hereby made to all forward-looking Americans to aid in securing the proposed Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal from Cumberland Sound, on the Atlantic coast, across the States of Georgia and Florida, to Mobile Bay and the Mississippi River by requesting the Members of Congress from the various States to support the new bill, H. R. 8742, that has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman R. A. GREEN, of Florida, for the preliminary examination and survey of the proposed route for this project. No appropriation is asked for construction, as that can not be considered until the Government engineers have made a comprehensive examination and report to the Secretary of War, including estimate of the cost.

Next in importance to the Panama Canal will be the Atlantic-to-Mississippi barge canal when completed. It will connect the Atlantic intracoastal waterway with the Mississippi River at New Orleans over the following proposed route, which is to be resurveyed by Government engineers: From Cumberland Sound via the St. Marys River, and with connecting links, crossing the Suwannee River, Aucilla River, St. Marks, Wakulla, Ocklocknee Rivers to St. Georges Sound at Carrabelle, Fla. (southwest of Tallahassee and the terminus of the Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway); thence via the Government canal (that connects the Apalachicola River with St. Andrews Bay, and cost approximately $500,000 to construct a few years ago, now used by small boats for local traffic) to St. Andrews Bay; thence to Choctawhatchee Bay and via Santa Rosa Sound to Pensacola Bay; thence via Big Lagoon to Perdido Bay; thence to the 9-foot depth in Mobile Bay, from which point westward to New Orleans the way is now open for barges. The industrial canal at New Orleans, which connects the Mississippi River with Mississippi Sound via Lake Pontchartrain, will be the western link of the Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal project.

We are reliably informed that only 6 1/2 miles of construction will be necessary to provide a barge canal from the 9-foot depth in Mobile Bay eastward to Carrabelle, Fla., on St. Georges Sound, and the preliminary examination and survey was authorized, under the river and harbor act of March 3, 1925, for the western section of the proposed Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal route—New Orleans, La., to the Apalachicola River, Fla., and to include a survey of the Apalachicola and Chattahoochee Rivers to Columbus, Ga., with the view of operating self-propelled barges between Columbus and New Orleans.

Nature has provided practically three-fourths of the canal route across northern Florida with deep-water bays (which are fine land-locked harbors on the Gulf) and rivers and sounds; and from Carrabelle eastward to Fernandina it will only be necessary to connect existing waterways to reach the St. Marys River, which is navigable for about 65 miles westward from Cumberland Sound.

After the Atlantic intracoastal waterway has been completed from Beaufort to Fernandina, then there will be a route for barges via an all-inland protected waterway from Cape Cod to the Mississippi River via the Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal across southern Georgia and northern Florida and southern Alabama between Pensacola and Mobile Bays, which route will be continuous and of uniform dimensions and will be open every day in the year, never closed by ice. Return loads can be carried over this route in either direction.

The Panama Canal was agitated for 300 years, with all sorts of adverse reports, and France expended millions of dollars in attempts to complete it, yet it is a success to-day and has changed the shipping routes of the world. The Industrial Canal at New Orleans was promoted for nearly 40 years, but was finally accomplished and dedicated on May 2, 1921. The proposed Atlantic-Mississippi Canal has been agitated less than 50 years and a survey of the northern route across Florida was made in 1876 by Lieut. Col. Q. A. Gilmore, a Government engineer, who recommended this route as a section of the national system of inland waterways for barge traffic. His report sets forth the feasibility, advantages, and the miles saved in water transportation from the upper Mississippi cities to Liverpool and other foreign ports by a barge canal that will touch the ports of the South and Southeast. At Cumberland Sound is a protected harbor of great depth, comprising some 32 square miles. The construction of the Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal will make efficient the inland waterways and rivers of the interior section of the United States and will give the farmers and manufacturers of the midwest a foreign market at Cumberland Sound by water transportation at lowest freight rates, and in addition this canal will be of the greatest permanent benefit to all of the Southern States in their agricultural and industrial development.

The history of the efforts that have been made to date in this important matter are, briefly, as follows:

In 1876-77 Lieut. Col. Q. A. Gilmore made a survey from Cumberland Sound via the St. Marys River, Okefenokee Swamp (Ga.), the Suwannee River (Fla.), St. Marks River, St. Georges Sound, to the Gulf of Mexico, and his report strongly recommended the construction of this canal. It appears that no action was ever taken to carry out his recommendations, and the matter was allowed to drop.

In 1894 the matter was again taken up by Maj. Robert Gamble, of Tallahassee, Fla., and a memorial was presented to the Senate of the United States and referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard and ordered printed. (Mis. Doc. No. 37, 53d Cong., 2d sess., December 20, 1894.)

In 1913 Gov. Hugh M. Dorsey, of Georgia, at the request of Mr. J. H. Becker, of St. Marys, Ga., and others, revived the matter by calling a meeting at St. Marys and Fernandina in June, 1918, which meeting was attended by the Governors of Georgia and Florida and many men prominent in public life. Indorsement was given the project, and a temporary organization was effected.

In August, 1918, the Georgia Legislature passed an act (No. 491) authorizing the appointment of a committee to go to Washington and arrange for a hearing.

On September 6, 1918, a hearing was had before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and same was ordered printed. On account of the World War it was not possible to take the matter further then, and nothing more was done until 1919, when the North Florida Chamber of Commerce (headquarters Tallahassee, Fla.) secured the cooperation of Congressman Frank Clark, of Florida, who introduced a bill in Congress (H. R. 9449) asking for a survey of the route from Cumberland Sound to St. Georges Sound. This bill was later withdrawn and a new bill introduced by him extending the route westward from St. Georges Sound to the Mississippi River (H. R. 10919).

In October, 1919, the North Florida Chamber of Commerce asked Governor Dorsey to arrange for another meeting, and the same was held at St. Marys, Ga., on December 11-12, 1919. At the session held in Fernandina on the second day a "steering committee" was elected to secure a hearing for the new bill, and Senator James E. Calkins, of Fernandina, was elected as chairman of this committee. On January 29, 1920, the hearing was held before the Committee on Railways and Canals of the House of Representatives of the United States, and this committee made a favorable report in February, 1920 (Rept. No. 1246, 3d sess., 66th Cong.), recommending that the resurvey be made. As the Esch-Cummings bill (the general transportation act) and other important legislation were then being considered by Congress, the steering committee decided to wait until these bills had been disposed of before having Mr. Clark's bill brought up, that this canal project might not be overshadowed by other legislation; and there the matter rested.

A little later in 1920 the "Atlantic-to-Mississippi Canal Association" was organized and it functioned until the Georgia and Florida State canal commissions were created in 1921 to act as the State's agencies in this matter, when the association ceased its work, realizing that this was more than a "canal across Georgia and Florida" and should be handled as a national project, since its construction will be vital to the development of domestic and foreign commerce. In the event of future wars this canal could be invaluable to the Government, providing a safe, protected inland route from the Mississippi River to Cumberland Sound—a deep-water harbor with 32 square miles of anchorage area with depth of from 30 to 90 feet and only 3 miles from the open sea—where a bunker coal port could be established at a port never closed by ice; and at Cumberland Sound the Atlantic-Mississippi Barge Canal would connect with the inland waterway along the Atlantic coast to New England, making it possible (as Major Gamble states) for the Government to "send from New England to Louisiana, promptly and safely, armaments and stores to meet emergencies, which could not venture upon the high seas floating a hostile navy." And the inland route from Cumberland Sound via St. Georges Sound to Mississippi Sound would not only save many miles, but avoid the dangerous straits of Florida and the tropical storms outside. A barge canal over this route would not only be feasible but economically and financially a sound proposition. Nature has already provided, ready-made, most of this route. Light-draft boats could enter or leave this canal, to and from the Gulf of Mexico, through the numerous bays and sounds, from Carrabelle, Fla., westward; the actual excavating would probably not exceed 150 miles.

In 1915 the Government constructed a canal to connect the Apalachicola River and St. Andrews Bay (about 24 miles) at a cost of about $500,000. A cut of approximately 14 miles would connect St. Andrews Bay with Choctawhatchee Bay; thence via Santa Rosa Sound to Pensacola Bay. A cut of about 4 miles would connect Pensacola Bay with Perdido Bay, and a further cut of 10 miles, more or less, would provide the final link with Mobile Bay and Mississippi Sound; thence through Lake Borgne and Lake Pontchartrain and the industrial canal at New Orleans to the Mississippi River.

In 1921 the Legislatures of Florida and Georgia created State canal commissions (Laws of Florida, 1921, ch. 8578, No. 183; Georgia Laws, 1921, Pt. I, Title VI, p. 159) for the purpose of securing the resurvey and construction of this canal, and made the governors of these State members ex officio of the commissions. In July, 1921, Gov. Cary A. Hardee appointed the following citizens of Florida to serve for a period of two years: John G. Ruge, of Apalachicola, as chairman of the commission; Frank D. Upchurch, of Fernandina, and Mrs. Florence R. S. Phillips, of Tallahassee, and the commissioners elected Mrs. Phillips as secretary of the commission. In July, 1923, Governor Hardee reappointed Chairman Ruge and Mrs. Phillips, and since Mr. Upchurch was unable to give attention to the work, appointed E. W. Bailey, of Fernandina, as the third commissioner. On January 6, 1925, Gov. John W. Martin became a member of the commission. In July, 1925, Governor Martin reappointed all members of the commission, and the secretary was reelected.

There would seem to be no reason why the Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal could not be dedicated to commerce in 1935, or sooner, if all agencies will cooperate and concentrate upon the matter. The canal could be built with funds derived from the sale of Government bonds, tax exempt, say, for 30 or 50 years. The bonds could be issued in series, as needed, like the Liberty and Victory bonds, and would be as eagerly bought by the public. Government issues are always oversubscribed. The construction would provide work for thousands of men for several years, relieving the unemployment situation and putting millions of dollars in circulation, to the benefit of all classes of business.

The Atlantic-to-Mississippi barge canal could be used every day in the year (unlike northern canals and rivers that are icebound for four to six months each year); barges and other vessels could come from the upper Mississippi and tributary rivers and waterways, from the Great Lakes via the canals connecting them with the rivers of the interior States, with shipments for the Southeast and for export, and could carry return loads of citrus fruit, produce, minerals, lumber, and naval stores, coal, and other merchandise; there would be no loss through one-way traffic.

THE OUTSTANDING APPEAL OF THIS PROJECT

The inland waterways of the United States can not be complete without a barge canal from the Atlantic inland waterway to the Mississippi River; the Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal will be wholly within the boundaries of the United States.

With suitable barges, oil can be delivered from Texas, Oklahoma, and even from Mexico (thoroughly protected, as it were, by a pipe line) at the Atlantic coast for use in peace or war, at a minimum cost and without hazard—this alone means the saving of millions of dollars to the United States, to say nothing of this canal's value to domestic commerce and export and import traffic to and from the Atlantic seaboard.

This canal will save approximately 500 miles between New Orleans and New York; it will extend the Warrior River barge service (now fully established and profitably operated between New Orleans and Mobile) to the Atlantic States, which means that coal from Alabama can be cheaply transported to other Southern States and to Eastern States, thereby encouraging new industries to locate in the Southeast.

And coal from Indiana, Ohio, and other inland States can be transported by barge, without transshipment, to the bunker coal ports of the South and East, and to other new markets, domestic and foreign; this canal will be the means of developing a great import, export, coal, and fuel harbor at Cumberland Sound.

No foreign enemy ships could approach the great commercial inland cities by this route, since it will be a barge canal.

It is advisable for the Federal Government to look ahead in time and provide an all-inland, protected, continuous waterway from Cape Cod to the Rio Grande that will adequately serve the needs of the Government, of general commerce, and especially of the States in the Mississippi Valley, the grain-growing section and great producing half of the United States; it is highly important to first connect up all of the coastal and inland waterways of the United States before undertaking to permit our Government to become a party to the construction of any international projects.

President Calvin Coolidge has said: "Foremost in the development of commerce has been the utilization of waterways. Our own country looks for its present and future development to the use of its waterways, the natural avenues and highways of trade."

"In America," said the late President Warren G. Harding to the Agricultural Conference, "we have too long neglected our waterways."

The Republican national platform pledges the improvement and development of waterways, inland and coastwise, to the fullest extent, and the Democratic national platform favors a policy for fostering and building of inland waterways, liberal appropriations for prompt coordinated surveys as well as deeper waterways from the Great Lakes to the Gulf and Atlantic Ocean.

The Mississippi Valley Association is committed to waterway development and has indorsed same, as has the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, the Southern Commercial Congress, the North Florida Chamber of Commerce, and local commercial organizations along the proposed route of the canal. The use of water transportation is coming back and will be developed more in the future. The building of the Atlantic-to-Mississippi barge canal will benefit the corn-growing States enormously, as corn shipped through the canal will not be affected as when shipped through the Gulf Stream around the Straits of Florida; it will benefit the Middle Western States, the New England States, the Central and Southern States—practically every State except those along or adjacent to the Pacific coast. And in future years, when the Intracoastal canal is extended from New Orleans via the Rio Grande to California, it will change the shipping routes of the world that now pass through the Panama Canal, and at an enormous saving of time and fuel and avoidance of the dangers of the open sea. All of the States of the Mississippi Valley and of the Chattahoochee Valley will be directly benefited; all cities and towns of the United States east of the Rockies, situated on navigable waterways, will be directly benefited by the construction of this project.

Chicago will be connected with the Mississippi River by the Illinois Drainage Canal, a $20,000,000 project. Lake Erie will be connected with the Ohio River by the Lake Erie and Ohio River Canal; the Erie Canal, New York Barge Canal, all will be connecting links in the national waterways system. All classes of business will be stimulated through increased and cheaper transportation and access to the coal fields of the interior States; new transportation routes will relieve the congestion at northern ports, relieve the shortage of fuel, prevent interruption to traffic during the winter months, and will be a permanent blessing to our country.

A route across Florida to and from the open ocean and Gulf will not be feasible for barge traffic; besides, an inland waterway is desirable for use in time of any future war, providing a protected route for transportation of supplies, munitions, and fuel to the Government forts and air stations along the Atlantic and western Gulf coasts.

For all reasons it will prove to be a wise investment for the Government to construct the Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal and provide a continuous inland route for barges from Cape Cod to the Rio Grande, and with the least possible delay.

[Extract from report of Committee on Railways and Canals]

(Report No. 1246, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, on H. R. 10919. Mr. WHEELER)

The committee desires to append hereto certain data brought out in the hearing on this bill:

RESULTS OF BUILDING THIS CANAL AND WATERWAY

Extending the Mississippi River to the Atlantic.

Developing a great import, export, coal, and fuel-oil harbor at Cumberland Sound, and providing access to foreign markets for the coal and oil fields of the South and Central West and for the raw products and manufactured goods of the great producing half of the United States.

Giving additional transportation facilities and perpetual lower freight rates to the States bordering on the Mississippi and its tributaries and to the Gulf and South Atlantic States, and relieving one-half of the United States from the costly and unnecessary sea and rail hauls, due to the present routing of imports and exports through north Atlantic ports.

Promoting the national defense by providing a short cut, through inland and protected waters, from the Atlantic to the Gulf of Mexico and the Mississippi River.

Placing New Orleans and Mobile 500 miles nearer to Liverpool and New York, and making New Orleans the western terminal of a great volume of trans-Atlantic and coastwise shipping.

Providing return cargoes for the rail lines paralleling the Mississippi River, by delivering at New Orleans a largely increased volume of freight from eastern and foreign ports for distribution through the Mississippi Valley, thereby benefiting those roads and the entire transportation system of that section by making it possible for these lines to equalize traffic in both directions, and to reduce the freight cost per ton through the greater volume of business and through the abolition of the present empty-car movement northward from New Orleans.

Aiding our mercantile marine by providing a fuel, docking, and repair port on the south Atlantic coast 500 miles nearer the Panama Canal than is Norfolk. This port will be located at the mouth of a transportation funnel, through which the products of nearly half the country will naturally move to eastern and foreign markets, thereby furnishing return cargoes for the vessels bringing imports to that point, which imports can be easily and cheaply distributed through the same territory. The result will necessarily be an enormous increase in our foreign trade and increased business for our shipping.

Opening up great agricultural, mineral, and industrial sections of the country, now largely undeveloped, on whose prosperity the future of the United States must largely depend.

Benefiting the United States as a whole more than any other single project since the construction of the Panama Canal.

The Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association resolutions declare their belief in the principle "that all appropriations made by the Congress of the United States for the improvement of waterways should be expended solely upon such improvements as lie wholly within American boundaries."

Among the resolutions adopted at the Fourteenth Annual Convention of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association at Savannah, Ga., November 18, 1921, was the following:

"Chief among these is the intracoastal waterway from Maine to Florida and thence to the Gulf of Mexico. The utilization of the sections already improved, which are as yet limited by the incompleteness of the whole system, has given substantial proof of the wisdom and the economic necessity for the project."

And the Fifteenth Annual Convention of the association, held at Portland, Me., on September 15, 1922, adopted and had sent to Chairman John G. Ruge, of the Florida State Canal Commission, the following:

[Telegram]

PORTLAND, ME., Sept. 15, 1922.

JOHN G. RUGE,
Apalachicola, Fla.:

The Atlantic Deep Waterways Association would welcome passage of bill for survey and will so advise Congress.

W. H. SCHOFF, Secretary.

Resolution passed at the annual convention of the Mississippi Valley Association at Kansas City, April 25-26, 1922

FLORIDA CANAL PROJECT

We recommend and encourage the efforts of the State of Florida toward the resurvey and definite work upon the Atlantic-Mississippi Canal project, upon which labor the State of Florida has embarked so energetically with the view of linking up this project with the intracoastal Canal, to which we are committed, as an investment in economic freedom and transportation relief for the section affected and as an aid to the Mississippi Valley and the Nation.

Resolutions adopted by the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association at the sixteenth annual convention, at Norfolk, Va., November 16, 1923

[From the printed report of the convention]

The delegates and members of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association in sixteenth annual convention assembled in the city of Norfolk, Va., and representing every Atlantic seaboard State and the District of Columbia, do hereby adopt the following resolutions and recommendations and earnestly submit the same for the consideration of the United States Congress and the legislatures of the several States:

"The adequate development of a national inland waterway system is foremost among the internal improvements necessary to the future welfare of the country.

"Foremost in this system is the intracoastal waterway from Maine to Florida and thence to the Gulf of Mexico. The utilization of the sections already improved, as yet limited by the incompleteness of the whole system, has given abundant proof of the wisdom and economic necessity of this project.

"The Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, organized in 1907, has consistently advocated this important cause. * * * If so connected, commerce can be carried continuously between all ports on these rivers and bays and all ports along the coast. * * * At recent sessions we suggested the motto: 'American money for American waterways.' This year we suggest another: 'Why not get the American waterways in shape to work?'

WATERWAY ACROSS FLORIDA

"A waterway across the State of Florida connecting the Atlantic with the Gulf has been advocated, and the proposition commends itself to this association. It would shorten communication between the ocean and the Gulf, would avoid the hazards encountered by navigation around the Florida Cape, and would form a necessary connection between the intracoastal waterway along the Atlantic seaboard and the intracoastal waterway along the Gulf. We commend this prospective project to the attention of Congress and the engineers and express the hope that a practicable route may be selected and its construction brought within reasonable cost to the end that this essential navigation link shall be provided."

[Extracts from the annual address of the president of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, Hon. J. Hampton Moore, at Norfolk, Va., November 13, 1923]

Sixteen years have elapsed since the organization of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, the purpose of which was to establish a better understanding along the Atlantic coast with respect to the development of ports and waterways and to encourage favorable action thereon by Congress, State, and local authorities. The result of this agitation has been highly beneficial along the entire seaboard and, in a way, has inspired efforts in other sections of the country to improve and utilize our natural resources. * * * The work of this association has been of great value to agriculture, commerce, and industry throughout the United States.

We should not fail to note the continued progress of foreign nations in canal development. England, France, Germany, Italy, and the Netherlands—all of them are keeping up their canalization for the encouragement of transportation and the distribution of commodities. Some of their canals were indispensable during the war.

* * * And, while we are speaking of foreign activities, may we not again urge that the Congress of the United States be careful to give first consideration to American enterprise, so that the commerce of the United States may have a square deal with respect to foreign competition.

A great project to the north of us, which has many proponents in the United States, would draw heavily upon United States resources, and, if adopted, upon Federal funds now required for our internal improvement. . . . Let us prepare for our own future. Let us care for our own household. Let us not postpone it nor delay it. Let us do it now! If we would see America first let us put America first! And, having said this much to ourselves in convention, let us say it to Congress and continue to say it until Congress shall approve.

Resolution adopted by the Southern Commercial Congress, at the annual convention held in Chicago, November 20-22, 1922

Whereas the commercial progress of the United States will be materially advanced by the development of water transportation; and the building of canals connecting the rivers and lakes and the Atlantic Ocean with the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico will add to the safety of our country; and

Whereas a bill has been introduced in Congress asking for a resurvey of a proposed canal route from Cumberland Sound to the Mississippi River and a canal connecting those bodies of water would be of inestimable value to commerce and to the Government, providing an all-inland protected route where barges and other vessels could carry return loads in either direction from the upper Mississippi and the Great Lakes to the Gulf and south Atlantic ports every day in the year, and said canal would be wholly within the boundaries of the United States; and the eastern terminus at Cumberland Sound would provide a bunker coal port only 3 miles from the open sea, and large anchorage area never closed by ice, where ocean-going vessels could coal and secure cargoes for Europe and South America and other points at great saving of time and expense, and avoiding the delays and congestion at northern ports: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this organization give its indorsement and support to the project known as the Atlantic-to-Mississippi Canal connecting Cumberland Sound with the Mississippi River, to the end that this all-American canal may be constructed at the earliest practicable date after the report on the resurvey has been submitted to Congress in the manner governing such matters.

At the twelfth annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States in Cleveland, Ohio, May 6-8, 1924

Among the questions for consideration there was submitted for consideration, on request of the Tallahassee Chamber of Commerce:

That the national chamber indorse and support the project known as the Atlantic and Mississippi Canal, connecting Cumberland Sound with the Mississippi River.

The summary refers this matter, together with other subjects, to the board of directors that it may receive the further consideration it deserves.

[Extracts from the printed summary of the first midyear meeting, eastern division, Chamber of Commerce of the United States]

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 17-18, 1924.

TRANSPORTATION

The divisional meeting has heard in detail the conclusions of the transportation conference recently held in Washington under the auspices of the national chamber and has taken cognizance of the thoroughgoing character of the preliminary work, the results of which are embodied in the reports of six special committees appointed by the president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

There are contained in the reports of the transportation conference certain proposals which, in the opinion of the divisional meeting, are of great importance to the sound development of our national transportation system. For example, permissive Federal incorporation of railroads, supplementary legislation to perfect the consolidation provisions of the transportation act, store-door delivery (particularly by motor vehicles), and a comprehensive national waterway survey by the Army engineers with a schedule of priorities.

WATERWAY ACROSS FLORIDA

The fact that Florida is a peninsula jutting from the mainland southeastwardly for a distance of approximately 600 miles, abutting on the ocean and the Gulf, respectively, and with hazardous navigation for barges and small vessels around its southern extremity, presents the obvious necessity of constructing a waterway across the State by a protected route uniting the ocean and the Gulf and making possible through water transportation between the Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf States and the Mississippi River. The scheme is entirely practical. It is only a question of when the time is ripe and other conditions are favorable for its construction. We respectfully commend to the consideration of the citizens of Florida and to those who are promoting intracoastal waterway along the Atlantic and the intracoastal waterway along the Gulf from New Orleans to Corpus Christi, whether this is not the opportune time to renew efforts for the construction of this Atlantic-Gulf waterway.

House Memorial No. 6 to the Congress of the United States of America, asking that the preliminary examination and survey of the eastern section of the proposed Atlantic-Mississippi Canal be authorized, from Apalachicola, Fla., via St. Georges Sound, and across the northern portion of Florida to Fernandina, Fla., on Cumberland Sound.

Whereas the improvement and development of our harbors and rivers to meet the ever-growing demands of the commerce of the country, both coastwise and inland, is not only the duty but the proper function of the Federal Government; and

Whereas the construction of a barge canal from Cumberland Sound, Ga.-Fla., to St. Georges Sound, Fla., will link the Atlantic intracoastal waterway with the Mississippi River and the Gulf intracoastal waterway extending westward from New Orleans, and thus completing the inland waterway from Cape Cod to the Rio Grande, and furthermore, linking, through the Mississippi River, the Great Lakes with the Atlantic Ocean at a port never closed by ice, and which would be of untold advantage and value to the commerce of the Mississippi Valley, the Chattahoochee Valley, and to the Nation; and

Whereas by routing a barge canal up the St. Marys River and thence to St. Georges Sound some portions of existing rivers and streams in that section might be utilized, and thus require the digging of only about 100 miles for such canal; and

Whereas the construction of this canal would reduce the distance between the Mississippi River and Cumberland Sound some 500 miles and avoid the dangerous Straits of Florida, thus saving time and the possible destruction of shipping to the extent of millions of dollars; and

Whereas the legislature of Florida in 1921 created a permanent commission, designated the Florida State Canal Commission (ch. 8578, laws of Fla., acts of 1921) to secure the resurvey and construction of this project, and this proposed barge canal has been indorsed and approved by the Mississippi Valley Association (comprising 27 States), the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, the Southern Commercial Congress, and many other organizations; and

Whereas under the river and harbor act of March 3, 1925, there was an appropriation and allotment for the preliminary examination and survey of the waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., also waterway from Charleston to Winyah Bay, S. C., as well as the waterway between Beaufort, N. C., and Cumberland Sound, thus completing the entire inland waterway surveys of the Atlantic coast from Boston to Florida; and

Whereas an appropriation was also made, under the river and harbor act, aforesaid, for the intracoastal waterway from New Orleans, La., to Galveston, Tex.; and

Whereas the preliminary examination and survey of the western section of the proposed Atlantic-Mississippi Canal, from New Orleans, La., to the Apalachicola River, Fla., via Mobile Bay and Pensacola Bay, was authorized by the river and harbor act of March 3, 1925, for the purpose of securing a depth suitable to the economical operation of self-propelled barges; and said act further authorized the survey to be continued to Columbus, Ga., with the view of establishing barge service between Columbus, Ga., and New Orleans; and the inland route from Mobile Bay, Ala., is now open for barge traffic to New Orleans; and

Whereas the cost of the construction of a barge canal from Cumberland Sound, via St. Georges Sound, to Mobile Bay would not compare with the permanent benefits to general commerce to be gained therefrom: Therefore be it Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Senators and Representatives from the State of Florida in the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested and urged to make every effort to have the preliminary examination and survey made of the northern route across Florida from Cumberland Sound to St. George's Sound and thence to the Apalachicola River, Fla., to definitely locate the route of the Atlantic-Mississippi Canal so as to provide an all-inland route, through existing rivers, sounds, and bays, between Cumberland Sound and the Apalachicola River, there to connect with the western section of this project extending to the Mississippi River at New Orleans.

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Florida be requested to furnish each of the Senators and Representatives aforesaid a copy of this memorial, and that he also send a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War.

Approved May 14, 1925.

House Memorial No. 8 to request the Legislatures of Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana to memorialize the Congress of the United States of America to authorize the preliminary examination and survey of the eastern section of the proposed Atlantic-Mississippi Canal and Inland Waterway from Cumberland Sound via St. George's Sound to the Apalachicola River, Fla.; and to approve the construction of said canal and waterway from Cumberland Sound to Mobile Bay as soon as practicable after the Government engineers have made report covering said eastern section and the western section thereof from New Orleans, La., to the Apalachicola River, Fla.

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has, under the river and harbor act of March 3, 1925, authorized the preliminary examination and survey of the western section of the proposed Atlantic-Mississippi Canal and Inland Waterway, from New Orleans, La., to the Apalachicola River, Fla.; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Florida on May 11, 1925, memorialized the Congress to authorize the preliminary examination and survey of the eastern section of the proposed Atlantic-Mississippi Canal and Inland Waterway, from the Apalachicola River, Fla., via St. George's Sound and the northern route across Florida, to the St. Mary's River and thence to Cumberland Sound at or near Fernandina, Fla., and St. Mary's, Ga., and thus complete the preliminary examination and survey of the entire route of said barge canal and waterway project, from the Mississippi River at or near New Orleans to Cumberland Sound, via Mississippi Sound, Mobile Bay, Perdido Bay, Ala., and Pensacola, Choctawhatchee and St. Andrews Bays, Fla., to the Apalachicola River, and St. George's Sound, and thence to Cumberland Sound; and

Whereas it is expedient that the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana assist in securing the early complete survey of this project and the necessary approval for the construction of this barge canal and inland waterway that will connect the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway, the Rio Grande, the Mississippi River, and other rivers along the Gulf coast of the United States, as well as inland rivers and their tributaries, with the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway and ports on the Atlantic coast, from Florida to Maine, to promote the agricultural and industrial development of the Gulf Coast States, and increase and extend the domestic commerce of the Nation; and

Whereas the State of Georgia and the State of Florida have by legislative enactment created permanent State canal commissions for the purpose of securing the resurvey and construction of the Atlantic-Mississippi Canal and Inland Waterway from Cumberland Sound, via St. Georges Sound and the rivers, bays, sounds, and other natural waterways, to the Mississippi River at or near New Orleans, La., and said project has received the indorsement and support of the Legislatures of Georgia and Florida and of the Mississippi Valley Association (comprising 27 States), the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association (comprising all the Atlantic Coast States), the Southern Commercial Commerce, and other organizations national in scope, and the leading political parties are pledged to develop the inland waterways of the United States and make them efficient aids to the growing commerce of the country, and the Federal Government is committed to provide a continuous inland waterway from Cape Cod to the Rio Grande: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That we do request the Legislatures of the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana to take appropriate action at the next session thereof to urge the Congress of the United States to authorize the completion of the preliminary examination and survey of the route proposed for the Atlantic-Mississippi Barge Canal, the section beginning at the Apalachicola River, Fla., and extending via St. Georges Sound and the rivers and streams east thereof to the St. Marys River and Cumberland Sound, on the Atlantic coast at or near Fernandina, Fla., and St. Marys, Ga.; and request that the construction of said barge canal be authorized as soon as practicable after the Government engineers have made their report thereon, and also their report covering the Gulf division, from New Orleans to the Apalachicola River, Fla., at St. Georges Sound; and that said legislatures shall also request the Members of Congress from their respective States to aid this project: Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Florida be, and is hereby, requested to send a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State of Florida, to the Governors of Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, requesting that this memorial be transmitted by them to the State senate and house of representatives when the next session of their legislature convenes, and also request that the Governor of Florida be advised of the action taken by them in this matter.

Approved May 28, 1925.

LXVII—512

House memorial No. 5 to the Congress of the United States asking for an appropriation to improve and deepen the Suwannee River from the Gulf to Branford, Fla.

Whereas the Suwannee River is one of the important rivers in the State of Florida, and with a reasonable appropriation could be made suitable for navigation at all seasons of the year; and

Whereas the improvement and deepening of this river would mean the speedy development of a rich agricultural section of the State: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress use every honorable means to secure an appropriation sufficient to improve the Suwannee River, and to remove shoals, to the extent that said river shall be a permanent waterway for commerce at all times from the Gulf to the town of Branford, Fla.;

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be furnished to each of Florida's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved May 8, 1925.

Statement of organized effort to arouse public interest and cooperation to secure the resurvey and construction of the all-American inland waterway connecting the Atlantic intracoastal waterway with the Gulf intracoastal waterway and the interior waterways, Great Lakes, rivers, canals, and navigable streams that connect with rivers that are tributary to the Mississippi River and all other rivers flowing into the coastal waterways.

The proposed Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal and inland waterway from Cumberland Sound via the St. Marys River, St. Georges Sound, and other waterways, bays, Mississippi Sound, and Lake Ponchartrain to the industrial canal at New Orleans, to the Mississippi River, is a national proposition, necessary to connect and make efficient the inland waterways of the United States, and has received the indorsement and assistance of the following:

OUR COUNTRY FIRST!—COMPLETE THE NATIONAL SYSTEM OF INLAND WATERWAYS BEFORE CONSTRUCTING INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS

The proposed linking of the Atlantic Ocean with the Mississippi River by the construction of a canal from Cumberland Sound, a point between the States of Georgia and Florida on the Atlantic coast, to St. Georges Sound on the northern Gulf coast, will have a continuing value in the economic development of all that section of the country tributary to the Gulf of Mexico and to the Mississippi River. Without this connecting link there can be no complete national system of inland waterways for commerce and national defense. (Mississippi Valley Magazine.)

Build the all-American canal—the Atlantic-Mississippi barge canal.
